

That was the first time that the child had been seen since the day he was born. The mother had been told that the child was dead, but she had not believed it. She had searched for him every day, but she had not found him. She had been told that the child was dead, but she had not believed it. She had searched for him every day, but she had not found him.

Now with her little child dead and her heart broken, she had no more to live for. She had no more to live for. She had no more to live for. She had no more to live for. She had no more to live for. She had no more to live for.

Now the mother has at hand a downy and comfortable answer to this problem for every one which is available to the city mother. To begin with, it is a bed of wool in a downy and comfortable answer to this problem for every one which is available to the city mother.

Now this plain, bare provision for perfectly untrammelled running about is in itself a better idea than the average child under five, and this much can be obtained by any country mother with less effort and expense than a yard of quality. But this can be varied and improved in innumerable ways.

Nothing in this baby yard need cost a parent's family more than a few cents, nor take but very little time and effort in constructing. And yet the improvements made cover a very complete outfit for the outdoor use of children under five or six. Any mother who secures the simple apparatus here described may be sure that only the best for her own children.

Original report of the disaster stated that the vessel had been wrecked and that one life boat with captain, second mate and three of crew had been picked up by a transport; remainder of crew missing. Nothing was then heard until last Friday's Oregonian carried a dispatch stating that a second life boat containing members of the Dumaru had been picked up and landed at another port. The dispatch also stated that now all of the crew are accounted for, it is supposed that all are safe.

Mr. Christensen had been coming here for the past 20 years. Several years ago he bought five acres two miles south of town and has since built a fine modern bungalow. He has furnished it and has had much work done on the land in view of quitting the sea and making his home here. He is unmarried. His friends say that the trip on the Dumaru was being made for a friend of his who wanted a vacation and that it was to be the last journey for Mr. Christensen.

The following U. F. dispatch from Washington dated Monday shows that the suspicion that "accounted for" means "safe" was unwarranted: Fourteen men, the surviving remnant of the crew of the lost steamer Dumaru, landed at a point east of the Philippines. They drifted 23 days in an open boat. For ten days they went without food or water. Fifteen died of exposure and two were drowned. C. Christensen, of Bandon, is among the last.

Children under four often show a tendency to the habit of "digging" in the soil, but they delight in digging. This habit is usually acquired in the first year of life. A wooden box can be made for the purpose. It should be made of a light material and should be painted on the inside with a light color. Wilson, Co-operative observer, Coquille River Light station, reports the rainfall for the month of October was 1.20 inches; days rainy, cloudy and partly cloudy, 25; days clear, 6. Rainfall for the corresponding month of 1917 was 4 inches. Little rain has fallen since September 1st is 2.50 inches.

A $40,000 Wool Shipment. E. P. Anthony, a representative of the Albany Tannery, passed through Bandon Saturday en route to Gold Beach where he will ship out $40,000 worth of wool. The agent of this section, D. M. Moore, has purchased the wool. The price paid was $2.00 per pound.—Bandon World.

Carload of Ship Knives. A carload of ship knives were shipped Monday from Myrtle Point for the east coast, purchased by the Dutton Lumber Co. The work was supervised by Inspector J. E. Martin, of the company, and Ed Hinkle, of the J. W. Flanagan camp, at which the knives were split.—Record.

Probably the tiniest infant ever born in this community is a baby boy weighing 2 1/2 pounds, who arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Devaux, of Parkhurst, Sunday, November 17th. The child is apparently normal in every way and is full of "pop."—Bandon World.
