

Some Facts About Textiles

Heavily sized sheets can be detected by weighing them before and after washing. A test of this kind showed that six sheets lost two pounds. It is true that these sheets were not the finest goods, but they looked well and cost enough. Lace trimmed pillow cases do not last as long as plain ones. Hemstitched sheets and pillow cases will not wear as long as plain goods.

Mixed Goods

Cotton is a vegetable fibre; wool and silk are animal fibres. When a manufacturer combines them in weaving a fabric, the laundry's troubles begin. For example, take white cotton garments stitched or embroidered with silk thread. If washed to produce the best results for cotton, the silk will come out with a blue or yellowish tinge. If washed so that the silk will be protected, the garment will have a dingy or yellow appearance.

Mercerized Cotton

Mercerized cotton is cotton treated by the manufacturer with caustics, which under a slow drying process, under tension, produces the glossy or silky appearance which is its characteristic. In some mills where high grade mercerized cotton is produced, the thread, after mercerization, goes through a hard boiling process for five to seven hours and comes through improved. Furthermore, after the mercerization process, properly done, has produced the gloss on the thread, it can be bleached, dyed, washed, and scoured with no diminution of the sheen caused by mercerization.

This Medicine Recommended by a Doctor

When a doctor uses a medicine himself besides prescribing it to his patients, he must know that it has merit.

This is what Dr. J. H. Wagner, a prominent physician of Skate, Kentucky, has to say about Dr. Hartman's well-known remedy, PE-RU-NA: "I have used PE-RU-NA myself for catarrh and have given it to others for catarrh, bloating after eating and other ailments. It has proved a success in all cases with old and young men and women. All speak well of PE-RU-NA. It is the best of all tonics."

Dr. Wagner, out of the fullness of his own personal experience, for the good of all sick and suffering, recommends a medicine which he knows to be good. You may be sure a doctor would not endanger his professional reputation by endorsing PE-RU-NA unless satisfied beyond a doubt of its value.

Whether your trouble be a cough or a cold, or a more subtle catarrhal infection of the stomach, bowels or other organs, give PE-RU-NA a trial. The immediate improvement which you will see will satisfy beyond a doubt that PE-RU-NA is what you need.

PE-RU-NA may be purchased anywhere in tablet or liquid form.

Labor Council's Candidates
The Central Labor Council of Marshfield has endorsed E. Lothard McClure for district attorney, J. S. Smith for senator, T. J. Thrift for assessor, W. W. Gage for sheriff, Dr. J. P. Keiser for coroner and Pat Collier for county clerk. Only two of these names are printed on the republican ticket, but any name can be written in on any ticket.

It certainly seems, according to reports all over the country from New York to San Francisco and from St. Paul to New Orleans, that the people have gone on a strike against profiteering prices.

A DUROQUE MODEL

By LOUISE M. ADDELBORN.

At an unusually early hour one morning Clarice entered the little dress shop of Mrs. De Reval. An important social affair was coming off, for which she was, as yet, unprepared; and she was much pleased when Madame, with much enthusiasm, informed her that she had several gowns exactly suited to Clarice's style and figure.

Clarice examined them carefully. She had discovered Mrs. De Reval a couple of years before, when dwindling family funds forced her to stop buying at the most exclusive store in town, and take what she could get in the smaller, more moderately priced shops. The gowns designed by the clever little woman were as dainty as any she had ever seen, with the additional merit of being much cheaper. Nobody, so far, had detected any difference in Clarice's manner of dressing, or suspected that her clothes did not come from a more pretentious establishment. So she continued to patronize Mrs. De Reval, and Madame, in return, kept her choicest models for Clarice.

Two gowns in particular captivated Clarice, each so soft in texture, so dainty in design and delicate in shade that for some time she found difficulty in making a selection. At last she decided on a rich blue as being more suited to her complexion, and with a last, lingering, regretful look at the lovely rose-colored conception of silk and chiffon that she must leave behind, Clarice ordered her purchase wrapped, saying she would take it home with her, as she wanted it for immediate wear.

While waiting on the corner for the street car, Clarice was surprised to see approaching from the opposite side Millicent Gray, one of her numerous acquaintances. And to Clarice's astonishment Millicent walked straight into the store of Mrs. De Reval. Millicent had always boasted of doing her shopping in the more exclusive districts, and Clarice could not help wondering what she was doing in this rather unfrequented part of the town. She was about to call out, but just then her car came in sight and she boarded it, much pained.

The following evening Clarice was one of many guests at the function for which her dress had been specially bought. It was a gala occasion. There were wonderful gowns and the flash of multi-colored gems. Clarice, however, did not feel ashamed of her costume. It held its own, in spite of the higher-priced ones all around.

As she moved, as lovely as well-made as any, it set off her blonde beauty to perfection, and, stately as a young goddess, she kept a crowd of admirers around her the whole evening. She was obliged, in fact, to turn away a good many would-be partners.

It was late when Clarice caught sight of Millicent Gray at the further end of the room. Millicent beckoned, and, tired of dancing, Clarice excused herself to her partner and went over to see what was wanted. Within a few feet of her she stopped, rooted to the spot, for Millicent wore the rose-colored gown which only the day previous Clarice had seen at Mrs. De Reval's.

Seeing Clarice's surprise, Millicent smiled with pleasure. She thought her friend overcome with the beauty of her gown.

"It is pretty, isn't it? One of the newest at Stark's. A Duroque model."

"A Duroque model?" murmured Clarice.

"A real Duroque. They have so few, even at Stark's. Isn't it a darling? But you have a very pretty dress on yourself. Where did you get it?"

"At Stark's. It's—it's also a Duroque model." Clarice looked at the rose-colored dress, and tried to assume a correct and admiring expression, but quite suddenly and unexpectedly she began to laugh.

Millicent stared resentfully, her face red with anger.

Clarice went on laughing. "Oh, Millicent, please forgive me. I can't help it. I saw that very dress yesterday at Mrs. De Reval's—and I got mine there, too!"

Millicent's face, which had turned from red to white, grew red again. For a moment it looked as if she would cry, but Clarice's laugh was infectious, and presently Millicent, too, began to giggle until the two were almost hysterical.

"Clarice," said Millicent, when they were more composed, "this is the last time I resort to sham. For the past three years I've been buying my dresses at Mrs. De Reval's, because they cost less. I didn't have the courage to let people know it, for fear I might fall in their esteem. But this is a lesson to me. I'll be honest from now on."

"And so will I," declared Clarice. "Hereafter, if I get a gown from Mrs. De Reval that cost a third less than the same at Stark's, I'll let the world know it, and look no more for Duroque models."
