

HYPNOTIC CASE?

Strange Story of a Young Bandon Girl's Adventure

Bandon World

Little Kathryn Topping, twelve-year-old daughter of Mayor Topping, disappeared from her home Tuesday morning under what appears to be rather mysterious circumstances. She was not missed from home until a telephone call from Coquille informed Mrs. Topping that her daughter had been kidnapped. This was at about 10 o'clock and Mrs. Topping thought her daughter was still in bed, the child having been permitted to sleep late during the holidays. Mr. Topping was called on the line and he learned that the little one was safe at Coquille. He took the noon boat to Coquille and returned with the girl in the evening.

Investigation showed that the girl had left her bedroom on the second floor of the Topping home via a window and had climbed to the ground down a ladder. How the ladder got there is a mystery as it is altogether too heavy for a child of her age to move. It had been leaning against the house at another point and none of the family had moved it. The climb from the window to the ladder was also a very hazardous one for a child as it was necessary to first climb onto another slanting roof that was wet and slippery. It is doubted that a child could have gotten out that way without assistance. These circumstances and the statement of the child that she was made to do things she didn't want to do by another person whose identity or description she doesn't appear to know leads to the belief that some older person may have been responsible for her episode and that the influence may have been exerted through fear or hypnotism. She took with her a wicker bag and some clothing, and after leaving the home premises left her coat in the brush near the walk. This she says at the suggestion of the other person as she would be easily identified if seen with her coat on. The girl shortly before six o'clock that morning called at the Hay restaurant for breakfast and then took the 6 o'clock boat for Coquille. She apparently was alone. She told parties on the boat that she was going to North Bend. At Coquille she became hysterical and went to the telephone office to call up her parents.

Other circumstances surrounding the case give credence to the thought that the girl did not leave on her own volition. An investigation is being made. There had been no trouble whatever between the girl and her parents that would prompt her to run away. She has always been most obedient and is very studious. Unless influenced by an older person the conclusion is that the episode was the result of a child's fancy to carry out the adventure of a story book she may have read or a moving picture that she may have seen.

About Former Coquille Girl

The following about a former Coquille girl we clip from the Reedsport Courier: Miss Doris Tyrrell, one of the bookkeepers at the Johnson mill at Reedsport, and one of the oldest employees of the firm, left for Berkeley, California, to join her parents, who have moved to that city. Miss Tyrrell was held in the highest esteem by the many people of Reedsport and a favorite with all the mill employees who by her graciousness and thoughtfulness had won the highest respect of everyone of them, and to show their high appreciation they clubbed together and bought transportation for her from that place to her future home.

Wanted 100 Gallons

I. T. Sparks, district freight and passenger agent of the Southern Pacific who was down here this week had a new story. He said that recently a rancher in his territory had a mule to sell and inserted a want ad in a Portland paper reading "For sale—white mule, three years old." The rancher was badly puzzled at the first reply, a telegram, ordering one hundred gallons immediately. Sparks had to enlighten him as to the different uses of white mule.

Cavers' Loss in Cave In

While at work on the Rainbow fill last week Jack Diehl was unfortunate in losing his wallet containing $14 or more which fell into the fill and could not be recovered. James K. Cavers also lost a fine manicure set which fell into the same place while he was working on the fill.—Reedsport Courier.

Is Certainly Paid (From Farm Business)

C. K. Nelson, on South Coos River, has a small herd of twelve grade cows; he has milked these same identical cows for the past three years. The average production of butterfat per cow for these 12 cows during this time figured from the creamery statements is as follows:

1918—Average per cow 250 lbs. fat
1919—Average per cow 340 lbs. fat
1920—Average per cow 350 lbs. fat
What caused this increase of 100 lbs. butterfat per cow?

Feed Did It
That is, feed mixed with brains did it. In 1918 no extra grain or mill feed was fed to the cows outside of silage, hay and pasture.

In 1919 Mr. Nelson decided to try feeding some extra mill feed to his cows. He found that it increased the production of butterfat, but he did not know whether it was made at a profit or a loss as he kept no account of feed bought. So during the year 1920 he kept careful record of all mill feed purchased and fed. This totaled $800.00, and he also knew that it had increased the production 100 lbs. fat per cow or 1200 lbs. extra for the herd above what they had produced for one year without this extra grain or mill feed. Figuring the fat sold for an average of 50 cts. per lb, this additional 1200 lbs. would give him $600.00. Deducting the $800.00 for feed leaves him $200.00 extra profit, just for using his brain.

Kind of Feed
The chief mill feed purchased by Mr. Nelson was cocoanut meal and a little bran. He did not need to buy much grain for the reason that his corn silage and oat hay furnished enough grain containing sufficient carbohydrates to balance fairly well with the protein supplied by the cocoanut meal, bran and the small amount of clover mixed with his ryegrass hay.

In feeding his cows, Mr. Nelson did not attempt to figure out the proper amount of nutrients required for each cow according to her size nor in proportion to the quantity and quality of her flow of milk, but he tells us that if we will make up a more nearly balanced ration for them he will try to make them produce an average of 400 lbs. of fat per cow for the year 1921.

There are many others of you dairymen, who have found out that it pays to feed and care for your cows rightly. Please let us hear how you did it, so that others may profit by it.

Death of Samuel Bettys

The following Roseburg item of Jan. 1st, tells of the passing of a well-known character who was a cousin of W. C. and A. W. Bettys, and who preached here a couple of years ago:

Samuel Bettys, designated Uncle Samuel, by his many close friends in this county, and widely known as the cowboy preacher, died at Portland Sunday morning, Dec. 26. The body will arrive in Roseburg today, accompanied by the widow and David Morgan, of Looking Glass, who is also a relative of the deceased. The funeral will be held from the Looking Glass church at 2 o'clock this afternoon, Major Stark, of the Volunteers of America, preaching the service. Interment will be in the Looking Glass cemetery. Mr. Bettys had a large acquaintance throughout Douglas county, where he has preached a great many times in the past few years, and his travels over a wide circuit, taking him over all parts of the state, were always done with a horse and buggy. Mrs. Bettys accompanied her husband on these evangelistic tours.

Ben Shields Badly Hurt

Ben Shields, a Bancroft young man, was brought in Wednesday afternoon, suffering from a crushed and broken hip and a broken shoulder which he sustained by reason of a log rolling over him about 10:30 Tuesday morning. Dr. Pemberton was summoned soon after the accident and fixed him up so he might be brought to town for treatment and nursing.

He was hauling a log for stove wood when the muddy road permitted the rig to skid forward onto the horses' heels. It brought up against a stump dislodging the log. Mr. Shields' foot caught and he was thrown down, the log passing over him.

The injured man was packed over a trail for four miles by neighbors to old Camp Eight of the Smith-Powers logging company. There he was placed on a speeder and brought to town. His injuries were given attention soon after his arrival and he is now resting as well as could be expected.—Powers Patriot.
