They are diseased a great deal with leprosy, rheumatism, elephantiasis, smallpox and many other mala lies. I see all these or their evidences constantly, and fequently doctor them. The country is very unhealthy for white men, malaria, blackwater fever and dysentery being the chief troubles. I have had several attacks of malsia, but recovered. Blackwater fever is usually fatal; but the native's complaints can be avoided by being careful. Some of the lepers appear most hideous, with faces and bodies eaten away. The well and sick live together, as they do not realize what it is, and the whites have not gotten them well in hand yet. There is no general language among the coastwise people, but up the Niger Hausa is the chief tongue.
