The following is a part of the circular issued by the Hazelwood Cream Company of Portland, and it should be of special interest to those who have cows: "Oregon and Washington butter now commands a premium on the markets west of the Cascade mountains because the consumer has at last learned to appreciate the home article as one of dependable merit—this knowledge has only come to him since it became unlawful to use Oregon labels as a mask for eastern butter. This law acts as a 'double header,' first in preventing a deception to the consumers, and second in insuring to the farmer an honest return for his product by putting out of commission unfair competition. Up to the passage of the necessary law Oregon butter was looked upon with suspicion because of its uneven quality, due to the consumer being supplied with eastern stock shipped a thousand miles when he thought he was buying home churned, the label being his only guide. Oregon and Washington farmers, now that can depend upon a square deal in that your product will bring its 'merit worth' to you, do you not think a few more cows added to your herd would be a good investment?"
