ZORTH BEND, OREGON

There was a feast in Hobo camp the other night so our local "hot tamales" man reports. It was about 10:30 o'clock and trade was not very good out on the corner in front of the Theatre Cafe. The "hot tamales" in the basket and gasoline steam pan were evidently sending forth some enticing odors, for without warning an order came for the whole supply. The new customer did not show any money, but he did show something far more persuasive—a wicked looking little pistol. The vendor did not debate the matter, and as no other customers were in sight on the streets, the dealer decided that it was too late anyway for retail business so promptly turned his whole supply of "hots" over to the attractive customer. The "excitement" of the affair prevented any very extended official search at the time for the banqueter, but the hot tamala steam-pan was recovered next morning in Hobo addition near the S. P. tracks.—Roseburg Review.
