A Letter From Abroad.

The following extracts from letters written by Miss Lucia Sperry while in England, may prove interesting to readers of the Herald. In our next issue will appear like communications from Scotland and Ireland.

London, June. This is certainly not keeping to my resolution to write a little each day, but it is absolutely the first opportunity I have had for letter writing since reaching London.

What a wonderful time we are having. I fear it may sound like bragging to tell some of it, but it is not meant that way.

We reached London Wednesday afternoon and came directly to this beautiful home where we are being entertained. It is one of the fine, old English homes of which one reads in books. An immense house of five stories, furnished like a palace, rare old prints and books everywhere, all treasures, and more servants than I have been able to count. There are four daughters three at home now. Each has her maid and everything else imaginable. It makes me feel quite fine to go out in a beautiful carriage with coachman and footman in livery.

The Congress will be a great, historical event. I shall not attempt to write much about it, as Auntie has written long accounts to be sent on.

The second evening after we arrived, Bishop (Lord) Montgomery and his wife were invited here to dine with us.

It was a great privilege to meet in this manner, for he was the originator of the Pan-Anglican Congress idea. I will give you a list of the social events we have attended and are yet to attend; see what you think of it.

First came a garden party at Falham Palace, given by the Bishop of London; next a reception at Lambeth Palace given by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; a reception given by Countess Ellsmere at Bridgewater House, and one given by Sir John and Lady Kenney. An invitation from Arch-deacon Ely of Trinity college, to visit Cambridge, two or three private invitations of lesser importance, and last of all and grandest, an invitation from the Prince and Princess of Wales to meet the King and Queen. This is not until next Thursday.

Besides attending most of the sessions of Congress I spent a morning and evening at the wonderful Franco-British Exposition that people are coming from all over the world to see. The other great event in London this year is the International Horse Show, that and the general sight seeing we will "do" later on. Last night our host gave another dinner party, and we had music afterwards. One of the Misses Longman (that is the name of our host) sings very beautifully. We attended a wonderful and impressive service at Westminster Abbey this morning. We had fine seats given us, up in front, by the Dean of Westminster. I have marked them on the card with a cross.

This is the last day of the Congress, and we go to a hotel to stay until Friday to be near a small party with which we are to travel for a month. We thought it might be a good change after traveling by ourselves. It has been a fine thing to be entertained in a home of this kind, but, tho' they have asked us to stay longer, we wish to be free from social duties for the rest of our stay here, to do sight seeing.

I went one day with our hostess to meet the celebrated singer Mme. Albani. She tested the voice of one of the Misses Longman, a younger one. Next afternoon we visited the National Gallery, to see the many great masterpieces I have so often seen re-produced. In the evening we went to Mme. Tussaud's; you know it is over one hundred years old. The statuary is wonderful. Nearly every well known person in the world, from Kings and Queens down to Harry Tlaw represented, and all so well done; you can scarcely tell whether they are alive or not. We would stand still, trying to decide whether a policeman, for instance, was real or not, then would see some one sitting down and walk up to examine him, only to discover that he was real. It was very funny. There are statues there of some who died quite recently, and many of people still living. We visited the part called the "Chamber of Horrors" where are murderers and other criminals. I fully expected to have had dreams afterwards.

The great Thanksgiving service at St. Paul's Cathedral was most remarkable and impressive. The immense organ has more stops than I could count through an opera glass, and the organist had two assistants to pull them out as needed. It took twenty minutes for the procession of Bishops to pass a given point. * * * Yesterday morning we joined the party with which we were to travel a month, but left it at night. Though they were delightful people, we saw we could not keep up with their "gait," nor do as we wished to do; we like to poke round and see what does not interest the average tourist. (Cousin) Jennie Wells came over from Paris for an English tour, and we have arranged to travel together.

We went together to see a fine play that is said to have had the longest run of any given this century: "When Knights Were Bold." This morning we three went shopping. Some certain things are wonderfully cheap here. After luncheon we visited the Tower of London and saw the cells of the many great men, their names carved in the walls, hundreds of years ago; also the different points where the great historical events connected with the Tower took place. All the officials wear this costume (beef eaters) exactly as in early times.

In the afternoon we attended the party given by the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Prince is an inferior-looking man I think, but the Princess is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. I always thought her pictures flattered her, but it is not so. The Queen at a little distance, looked like a young woman, but when we came close we could see the wrinkles, and I think the hair she wore was not her own. She was dressed in lavender, and the Princess in a lace gown over pink, with a pink and white hat. Princess Beatrice of Battenburg, mother of the Queen of Spain, was present also, and a number of others of royal blood.

Next we go to Cambridge to see the many old colleges there, then to Ely on the Isle of Ely, Cambridge county, to visit a wonderful old Cathedral built nine hundred years ago.

No meeting was ever called in Oregon which has attracted the universal enthusiasm that has been created by the Oregon Good Roads Conference, which is to be held in the Convention Hall, 6th floor, of the Portland Commercial Club on Tuesday, Aug. 11th. An effort will be made to call the meeting to order promptly at 9:30 a. m., so that there may be at morning, and afternoon and an evening session. The railroads have made a rate of a fare and a third for a round trip for this occasion. Delegations representing every grange, the commercial bodies, and the different counties to be appointed by the county judges, are already reporting that they will be present. Every editor in the state is a delegate at large, as is the mayor of every city, and every county commissioner. A program is being prepared, but every effort will be made to get rid of long winded speeches and to get down to actual work that will produce results.

Blackman of Roseburg at the head, the ultimate purpose of which is to establish a wireless station at this point. Seattle, Tacoma, West Port, Aberdeen, Washington, and many others are now in building on this coast, and they also have an extensive chain of stations in the east.—Marshfield Sun.
