Purser Sam Johnson of the Dispatch took a bath one day last week. Of course there is nothing extraordinary in that unless we qualify the statement by saying that it was an involuntary bath. The cold water treatment took place while the Star Liberty was preparing to start from the local dock at 1 p. m. Sam had just soused Captain John Myers of the Echo in a shallow overflow and was descending the board to the Liberty's decks when his slippery pedals took a sudden shoot to skyward and he shot to the realm of the fishes. Sam went under all but his cocoonut, and, grasping the bump stringer, he held on like grim death to a nigger. He was finally pulled out by the laughing crowd of onlookers.
