Mrs. A. G. Aiken, of Marshfield at this time, but the pioneer milliner of the Coquille valley, has concluded to re-establish herself in the millinery business in this city, and has therefore secured the lower part of the Leach building near the Wickham Hotel and opposite the store of Lyons & Jones, where she will have on display a beautiful selection of millinery in charge of a competent milliner. Mrs. Aiken needs no introduction to the people of this section at our hands, she having been in that business in this city over 20 years ago, and has enjoyed much trade from the valley during the number of years she has been in Marshfield. She will most warmly welcome all old friends to her establishment.

Mrs. A. G. Aiken.

Edward Boyd arrived here Monday from Salt Lake, Utah, and will make an extended visit with his family. Mr. Boyd is still nursing a hand which he had nearly destroyed last winter. He is a conductor running out of Salt Lake, and one frosty morning he stepped from his train to the frozen grounds when his feet slipped, and in putting his hand back to break the fall it went onto the track and the car wheels passed over it, almost entirely destroying the hand. He had been in a hospital four months.

The Lee Willard Co. presented the "Missourian" on Monday evening at the opera house and was greeted by a good sized and highly appreciative audience. This is a good play, full of interest from first to finish with a climax occasionally that brought down the house in storm of applause. The songs of Miss Godfrey brought encore after encore as her brilliant tones melted away. Miss Godfrey is a singer of on mean accomplishments, and far superior to those of the average company. The Company play Wednesday and Thursday night. It is seldom Coquille has so accomplished company to entertain them.
