 Several linemen were busy in this city last week rewiring the phones of the Home Telephone Co., and connecting them up with the new cables recently put up on our principal streets. This work is being done in the best manner and a great improvement in the service is very noticeable. With the adoption of the cables all cross connections are avoided, and when one is using a phone it is not possible to hear all sorts of outside noises, and people talking on all lines borne by the same poles, and the voice to which one is listening comes clear, distinct and uninterrupted. It is the purpose of the company to continue the work of improvement as rapidly as the patronage of the system will warrant. The work of connecting up the phones with the cables at Myrtle Point was concluded several days ago.
