Homes and Schools Should Co-Operate.

(W. P. EVANS IN COOS BAY TIMES)

At the last meeting of the Mothers' and Teachers' Club in North Bend, W. P. Evans of that city delivered an able address on "The Relation of the Mother and the Teacher," and received many tributes for setting forth so clearly the necessity of co-operation between them. The Club was organized to bring this about and has already accomplished much toward the advancement of the North Bend schools generally.

Mr Evans spoke in part as follows:

"In one of the middle Western states about thirty-eight years ago, a boy just past seven years of age dressed in his best, (which was humble enough) a bundle constituting his surplus wardrobe was placed under his arm, mother kissed him goodbye and sent him away to attend his first day at school.

"His going on that day, was different from many who go to school in our towns and cities, for he went to enter a school in a city some 100 miles distant among entire strangers and could not return within a year. He walked through a timbered country six miles to the railroad station, waited into the small hours of the night for his train, and arriving at his destination in the early morning was met by an escort who took him three miles distant to the school he was to enter, and turned him over to the proper officer in charge.

"That was an epoch-marking day in the life of the boy, as it was in the life of the mother. He did not realize what it meant, of course, but the mother knew, for as she afterward said, she realized when her boy passed the threshold of home that day, he would never come back to her in the same undivided attitude of mind, thought and ideals, as he had maintained toward her before. Why? "Because from the moment he drew his first breath, she had been the focus of his every perspective; the essential, controlling factor in every thought and act of his young life; the single ideal and standard of all comparisons, the supreme and final court of appeal for all his difficulties; the shrine to which all pilgrimages of trust, hope, love and confidences were taken.

"But the very first day he entered school, that supreme control was gone; the responsibilities with all their compensating benefits from that day forward were to be, between mother and teacher (not her's alone as had been). Almost unconsciously a partnership had been formed between mother and teacher and the capital stock was the child. No greater partnership can ever be formed than that, for it involves the latent possibilities, development and character-building of the young, and this is the responsibility undertaken by mother and teacher when the child is sent to school. At this point, the definite co-operation begins between home and school.

"What a field for co-operation! What splendid capital stock, what vast possibilities of profit of humanity and civilization lies here, if co-operation exists and is directed along rational and intelligent lines. The original investment is worth it, the possibilities of immense gains are incalculable, so it must follow that earnest, constant co-operation between mother and teacher (the home and school) is a necessity for success.

"Do we have it? Are you mothers co-operating with the teachers? Are you teachers co-operating with the mothers with that zeal and earnest thought and action you would if your partnership was one of chattels or merchandise and the gains only monetary and commercial? How many of these mothers have made it a point and duty to know, and to know intimately, the teacher who is moulding the life and character of your child? How many times have you had that teacher in your home? How many times have you been to her school room and talked heart to heart confidences over the progress and welfare of your child?

"How many times have you teachers been in the homes of all or any of the children under your care? What do you know by personal knowledge and contact of their parents? Do you know anything of the home life, surroundings and environment of that peculiar child with whom you have so little patience and perhaps for whom you have less compassion? If you do your task of dealing with that child in made lighter and more effective. Is the life of the child of so little importance that mere formalities and conventionalities are sufficient co-operation? Does the mother's responsibility cease when the child passes through her doorway to go to school, and has the teacher done her complete duty when she has heard recitations prescribed more for the following day and attend to the dull routine of schoolroom discipline?

"Perhaps these suggestions are met and more too by this Mother's and Teacher's Club, and if so, I congratulate you on the splendid work you are doing. But if such is not the case, I commend these thoughts to you today as thoroughly practical and the true spirit from my point of view, in which home and school could and should co-operate. Upon some such basis splendid results are sure to follow.

"Formal gatherings, stiff courtesies, finger-tip greetings and pink tea banquets, are of little avail and effect upon a work so profound in its responsibilities, so far reaching in its results as the development and character-building of the young.

"The real sincere co-operation that results in giving to society good and courageous men for which the world is clamoring today, and a womanhood that may sit enthroned as the uncrowned queen of respected and honored homes, is the kind of co-operation we need and must have, if your work is to count for good and your organization prove to be a living factor in the advancement of society and mankind."

Best Treatment for Colds.

"Most ordinary colds will yield to the simplest treatment," says the Chicago Tribune, "moderate laxatives, hot foot baths, a free perspiration and an avoidance of exposure to cold and wet after treatment." While this treatment is simple, it requires considerable trouble, and the one adopting it must remain in doors for a day or two, or a fresh cold is almost sure to be contracted, and in many instances pneumonia follows. Is it not better to pin your faith to an old reliable preparation like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, that is famous for its cures of colds and can always be depended upon? For sale by R. S. Knowlton.
