P. S. Robison who was in town one day last week informed us that a large bevy of wild Canary birds which spent the summer at his place near Norway, have saved considerable of his crops from the ravage of the green aphid which have been quite plentiful in his section this season. There is no doubt but many kinds of birds are our friends to a greater extent than we are aware. Even though they destroy fruit for a short time in the seasons, these birds destroy insects the whole year round, and we should think twice before killing one or destroying a nest. These same little Canaries destroy a large amount of thistle seeds.
