Rev. F. E. Scofield, of Myrtle Point, passed through town Saturday, accompanied by his daughter, Clara, the widow of the late C. S. Bunch, and her children. They were on their way to Dora to look after the property belonging to the estate.

Rev. F. H. Adams objects to our leading editorial of last week, particularly on the ground that he thinks that, by implication, it calls him a "pinhead," and that he reads into it an insinuation that he doesn't pay his bills. Now, we will acknowledge that, on the first count, the language used is capable of that construction. At the same time, we will concede that the gentleman has a ground for complaint, for that isn't a nice thing to intimate of anyone; and as we do not wish to be unjust to any individual, even though he do not agree with the Herald, we will freely apologize for the objectionable expression. As for the second count, there is nothing in it. It merely had reference to the fact that ministers are often carried on the free list of country newspapers, as was the case with the Herald under the former management. If there is a minister in Coquille who does not pay his bills, the Herald has not had a hint of the fact.

Mr. Cleaves also feels aggrieved at the mention made of him, and after the passages of a week's time and after the amicable discussion of the matter with him, we are inclined to concede that it would have been better not to mention his names.

Personalities have no place in the discussion of the main question, which is a matter affecting the good of the town. Nor was there any personal feeling involved in the first utterance of the Herald, to which such strong objection has been made. And we want to say right here, parenthetically, that the stand taken by the Herald has met with endorsement and commendation fully as strong as the condemnation. People have called at the office, have stopped the editor on the street, have called him up on the phone, to endorse what he has said and to thank him for saying it. And, without exception, the people who have done this were among the very best citizens of the town—people who have as much interest in the town, as much stake in its welfare, as high moral principles and as high regard for the safety and purity of the young, as any of those who have taken the other position.

It is greatly to be regretted that in a matter as important as this all good citizens cannot agree. Could they all get together and agree on a program it is hard to place a limit on what they could accomplish. It is certain that they could effectually remedy some conditions which every one agrees are lamentable. But when you split the forces of good, and leave the forces of evil all standing together, you place the good at a great disadvantage, to say the least.

That there is great room for improvement in this town is undoubtedly true. It is true of every town on earth, large or small. Some are worse than others, but no town inhabited by the class of people which make up the population of Coquille can justly be denounced in the terms which have been applied to this place. The Herald simply will not repeat the language that has been used to describe conditions here. No question is raised as to the good intentions of the people who have endorsed such statements, but they are dead wrong, just same. The editor of this paper lived more than forty years ago in a town where conditions were so much worse than they are here that even in his state of youthful innocence and ignorance he could see more rottenness obtruding itself upon public notice at all times than is visible here at any time to an observation not entirely unsophisticated. This is not saying that no effort should be made for improvement. It is only a repetition of what was printed in these columns last week to say that no one can enlist in a more worthy cause than that of throwing every possible safeguard around the purity and innocence of the young. In this all good citizens will agree, the most conservative as well as the most radical.

It comes, then, to a question of methods, and on this there is a wide diversity of opinion. To divide the good citizens from the bad on the line of whether or not they are ready to follow the most radical and sensational methods is a system which has only its simplicity to recommend it. No human being is given authority to divide the sheep from the goats by the simple expedient of drawing the line of demarcation between those who always agree with him and those who do not. On matters of principle no one should compromise, but on matters of method there is always necessity and room for some of the "give and take" system. If the good citizens of Coquille could get together they would be so largely in the majority that nothing could stand before them, and they could "clean up the town" to some effect. And they could keep it clean, which is of more importance. But spasms and hysteria will never do it.

Much is said and written about the so-called venality of the press. It is charged that the business office controls the policy of the editorial room; that no paper dares to tell the truth as it sees it for fear of losing subscriptions or advertising; that nearly every paper is a coward when it approaches public questions upon which the people have manifested any degree of feeling; that the "interests," large or small, operating in the field covered by the paper have too much influence with the editor; that very few editors dare to speak their minds on public questions. There is truth in this, and it is conceded that it detracts greatly from the usefulness of the newspaper as a guide, philosopher and friend. But whose fault is it? Do the people really want a fearless and independent press? If so, they have a mighty queer way of showing it, sometimes. Courage and independence are fine things in a newspaper when it is exploiting your opinions; but how about it when it is advocating something you do not believe in? Do you "stop the paper," take out your ad, try to organize a boycott, endeavor to have the business men withdraw their patronage? If so you should never again have a word to say about the venality of the press. Very few newspapers have a Carnegie endowment. They depend on the patronage of the people; and most any newspaper man feels that he would rather be a live dog than a dead lion. That is one regard in which the editor of the Herald is shy on the newspaper instinct.

Truly, the way of the newspaper man is beset with pitfalls upon the right and upon the left and even in the middle of the road. If he fails to defend the good name of his town against all attacks, he is considered unworthy of the patronage of his townspeople. Yet the Herald man is threatened with annihilation because he does that very thing. If he fails to defend the merchants of his town, so far as possible, against the competition of the mail order houses, he falls in one of his most important duties and most thankless tasks. But listen to this. Two weeks ago the Herald republished an editorial from the Mail-Tribune calling attention to the connection between the white slave traffic and the starvation wages paid by the big mail order houses, and asserting that when one sent an order to the mail order houses he was encouraging white slavery. Perhaps that pleased the local merchants—we don't know. But one day last week we received a visit from a former subscriber who came, in a state of some exasperation, to stop his paper. He said that he was tired of being jumped on for sending his money to the mail order houses. It was his money and he had a right to spend it as he liked. If he could save money by buying of the mail order houses he proposed to do it. And he didn't think he was encouraging white slavery any more than the man who buys of the local merchants, for the goods were all made in the big factories where wage conditions were all about the same.

At any rate, he did not want to be constantly jacked up about it, and he wasn't going to. So there you are. N. B. If one of our local merchants wishes to make up the loss of this subscriber, we are all ready to make out a receipt.

A gentleman who came in to talk things over last week dropped the remark that he did not lay a certain editorial entirely at the door of the editor, for he thought that it wasn't written in this office but handed in from outside. He was informed of his mistake, and, lest some others may be laboring under the same hallucination it may be well to say now that so long as the name now appearing at the head of these columns is found there no one need be in doubt as to the authorship of these editorials nor as to the responsibility thereof. So far, no one in this city except the editor and the typesetters have known what was to appear here until the paper was printed, and the day that we are obliged to claim the utterance of any one else as our own or to consult any one as to what shall go in here, that day the name comes out of the paper. And that goes.

The Myrtle Point Enterprise criticizes a certain "eight-page" Coquille paper for using improper language, and quotes a reader as calling it sensational. This is a surprise. But why didn't the Enterprise name the paper? Misery loves company.
