The Tabriz Carpet

And Its Wonderful Secret

By CLARISSA MACKIE ********

The three young men gloated over the beautiful, silky carpet from Tabriz. John Fleming had spread it on the floor of his studio, and his two friends sat cross legged in the middle of its rich expanse while John pointed out its remarkable pattern.

"It's exactly as Billy translated from the old Persian manuscript," said John excitedly. "Here is the body of the mosque. All these little squares are the prayer rugs of the worshipers. Here in the niche facing the east is the altar. This mixture of peacock tints represents the altar itself, and beneath the altar, so the manuscript says, lie buried these famous emeralds of the great what is your idea about discovering these emeralds? You've claimed that the purchase of this rug was only the first step toward making the three of us rich. We've put all our available coin into it. What next?"

"Well, the manuscript says that this famous rug is a replica of the floor of the rose mosque in Tabriz. Unfortunately, there is much discussion as to which of the modern mosques was built upon the old foundation and flooring of the ancient rose mosque. Now that we have the floor plan it is my suggestion that we take the rug to Tabriz with us, and when we find the mosque floor plan that matches up with it, why, we will find some way to burrow down and get those jewels. We'll have to pay something to the government, I suppose."

"Suppose we fall. We will be out money and the trip we planned." "Be a sport," said Tom disgustedly. 'If we win we can take holidays and holidays. John, I'm with you. When

"The 22d-Prince Joachim," said John "Engage my passage, too," groaned

"Done," said John Fleming, rolling up the rug. "Now, you chaps, clear out I've got a lot to do in the next three

Fourteen days later the three friends and the Tabriz carpet landed in the Persian city and put up at a very indifferent hotel. John Fleming had gained for himself the reputation of being eccentric, for he traveled nowhere without a rolled and strapped steamer rug in his hand. He even appeared at the captain's table with it during the passage, and his plea that he needed it for a feot rest was not entirely acceptable to his table com-

They did not know that carefully sewed between two steamer rugs was the carpet from Tabriz. The morning after their arrival in the city they set forth on their search for the rose mosque, whose identity had been lost in many a pillaging and sacking of the city by infidels. Somewhere in the street of Sweet Incense was a rebuilt mosque whose floor would correspond with the pattern of the Tabriz carpet.

It was not until the second day that they stood in a small mosque wedged in between dark gray buildings. John Fleming did not unroll his rug. It was not necessary, for even to the unstudled eyes of Billy Blake and Tom Pike the floor of the edifice was similar in arrangement to that of the silky rug. As they stood there gazing, John Fleming pointing here and there through through the wear of centuries and the pressure of countless feet, traces of the beautiful marble floor. The altar, which might once have been that famous gem of peacock coloring, had been in a later day of restoration over-

"Beneath that, ch?" muttered Billly Blake, drawing a long breath.

"I think so," said John proudly. "What's your plan now?" growled

"You two slide out, while I remain you in. We can remove the altar in a jiffy and have the treasure out and away in no time."

"How about the guard? Isn't there some kind of a watchman on duty

"Hardly. The priests have trouble the daytime. No danger of the rascals haunting the mosque at night. Most of them are drinking sweet coffee in some cafe until morning." "Very well, John. Pick out your hiding place. Tom and I will go now. There, behind that carved screen in the corner. So long, old chap." When John Fleming had dodged behind his screen and the footsteps of his friends had died away on the stone or he saw a shaft of golden light pierce the gloom of the mosque and then vanish. He knew that the door had opened and closed behind the forms of his friends.

Hours passed. People came and went, and at the hour of sunset the place was crowded. A priest went up into the tower, and far below in his place of concealment Fleming heard the whining musical chant of the muezzin call to prayer.

When it was dark, the thick, velvety blackness of an Asiatic night, he stepped softly to the outer door and, open ing it gently, whistled softly.

entirely alone.

A dark figure glided toward him. Lean fingers gripped his throat and choked him into silence. He struggled and tried to cry out, but he was powerless in the grip of a giant.

He was borne back into the mosque. and far away from the entrance in a tiny niche he was set down, and his captor produced a vile smelling oil lan-

Then it was that Fleming saw his aptor was a tall, fanatical looking individual, with a wisp of dirty green silk wound around his disordered head. "Come to the altar!" hissed the man in French. "You will show me and I will dig for the emeralds of the great shah." He pressed the blade of a knife suggestively against Fleming's throat, and there was nothing to do save to obey.

With ill grace John Fleming consent ed and, going to the altar, directed its emoval as well as the displacemen of the great block of stone upon which Together they worked in silence, us ing the rough tools the man had brought with him. When the altar had been removed from its bed of cement they pried up the stone slab beneath it and found nothing but a solid bed of cement.

Then it was that the fanatical priest flew madly at John Fleming and would have killed him had he not been the swifter of the two and managed to outrun his enemy in the dark corners of the mosque. Happily at this moment Billy Blake and Tom Pike appeared, and while John Fleming snatched up his precious roll of rugs they covered his escape to the street and followed him to the hotel.

"Dished!" said Billy Blake, disgust edly thumping the bundle of rugs. "Say anything you like; I'll take it all!" groaned John, sitting on the edge of his lumpy bed in grim despair.

Tom Pike, who said little, but in his slow and cautious way did much thinking, removed his pipe from his lips and dragged out his suit case. "I've got inside information that the emeralds of the great shah will be in America when we get there," he said mysteriously. "If you want to be in at the finish come with me and catch the next steamer for home."

It was significant of the subdued mood of the two younger enthusiastic treasure seekers that they merely followed his suggestion

During the homeward voyage John Fleming did not display the same solicitous care concerning the Tabriz carpet. For him it had lost its value. When they landed in New York Tom

Pike showed signs of excitement. "Fellows," he said cautiously, "soon as we're through the customs get a taxi and beat it to John's studio."

Two hours later three excited young men flung themselves from a taxicab and dashed up the stairs to Fleming's studio. Once there, they locked the door and opened wide the closed windows. "Well, Tom, what is it?" demanded Fleming and Blake in the same in the fact that it possesses more miles

"Here it is," said John, his finger on the rich mass of color. "Take your knife and dig there, John, and I reckon you'll find the em-

The roads in the mountains of North

Naturally other states try to discount this primacy of Rhode Island. An Indiana journal accounts for it on the ground that the state is in reality othing but Providence and Newport and their suburbs.

It then disposes of Massachusetts by the remark that, except for some hills through which only state roads run, that commonwealth is practically one big town. This process of elimination leaves Indiana at the top in the per-centage of improved roads.
