Results in the Burke case demonstrate that the side-stepping of the conservation issue as was the case in the Montana instance, is becoming unpopular with the people.

ADVERTISING - BY GOVERNMENTS

On one or two occasions there has been something of a shake-up in the War Department because of the alluring copy that has been hung up in posters, and featured in magazine advertising, in the securing of recruits for the army and navy. Washington officials have been warned that this copy should "tell the truth," rather than picture in poetical terms the care-free visions of life in the army and navy. Now England has introduced a similar advertising campaign and the old-fashioned Brits feel that patriotism must have indeed sunk to a low ebb when its War office resorts to such methods in order to secure recruits. There is an explanation forthcoming in defence of the British digression, to the effect that the immigration agencies have been securing the best young men, and in order to keep them at home and get them into the service, it has been necessary for the War office to adopt competitive measures. Therefore, the British, in looking about for pointers, have taken up the scheme of the United States in advertising for soldiers and sailors.

DEAD MEN'S SALARIES

It has been the custom for Congress to vote a year's salary to the widow and children of deceased Members. When Representative Pepper of Iowa died, it was pointed out that he was a bachelor, but had been the main support of his aged father. The House was asked to apply the same rule as obtains with the families of married men who die while in Congress, and to vote the usual $7,500 to the aged father, but the appropriation failed. In the Senate it was placed in the appropriation bill at the insistence of Senator Kenyon, who said he thought the custom entirely wrong, but as long as it prevailed he maintained that the old father should receive the same benefits that accrue to other members of a deceased Representative's family. The Senate, after a good deal of debate, agreed with Senator Kenyon, and now the House has threshed the matter out, with the result that the gratuity has been voted.

POSTAL SAVINGS AS FARM LOANS

Senator Gronna has a bill for the government to loan postal savings bank funds to farmers at four and a half per cent. As a matter of fact the government has only about thirty-five million dollars of these deposits—about one-third the amount held by single private institutions in New York and Chicago. The loans that could be made from the amounts spared from postal savings would not stretch very far in a country as broad as the United States—and therefore the Senator should guess again, for while his idea is valuable for news purposes in North Dakota, it falls pretty flat as a practical proposition.

The Case of Jennie Brice

across the river, had the room just behind.

I put up a coal stove in a back room next the bathroom and managed to cook the dinner there. I was washing up the dishes when Mr. Reynolds came in. As it was Sunday he was in his slippers and had the colored supplement of a morning paper in his hand.

"What's the matter with the Ladleys?" he asked. "I can't read for their quarrelling."
"Booze, probably," I said. "When you've lived in the flood district as long as I have, Mr. Reynolds, you'll know that the rising of the river is a signal for every man in the vicinity to stop work and get full. The fuller the river the fuller the male population."

"Then this flood will likely make 'em drink themselves to death!" he said. "It's a lulu."
"It's the neighborhood's annual de-bauch. The women are busy in the cellars, or they'd get full too. I hope, since it's come this far, it will come farther, so the landlord will have to paper the parlor."

That was at 3 o'clock. At 4 Mr. Ladley went down the stairs, and I heard him getting into a skiff in the lower hall. There were boats going back and forth all the time carrying crowds of curious people and taking the flood sufferers to the corner grocery, where they were lowering groceries in a basket on a rope from an upper window.

I had been making tea when I heard Mr. Ladley go out. I fixed a tray with a cup of it and some crackers and took it to their door. I had never liked Mrs. Ladley, but it was chilly in the house with the gas shut off and the lower floor full of ice water. And it is hard enough to keep boarders in the flood district.

She did not answer to my knocks, so I opened the door and went in. She was at the window, looking after him, and the brown valise that figured in the case later was opened on the floor. Over the foot of the bed was the black and white dress with the red collar.

When I spoke to her she turned around quickly. She was a tall woman, about twenty-eight, with very white teeth and yellow hair, which she parted a little to one side and drew down over her ears. She had a sullen face and large well shaped hands, with her nails long and very pointed.

"The 'she devil' has brought you some tea," I said. "Where shall she put it?"
"She devil?" she repeated, raising her eyebrows. "It's a very thoughtful she devil. Who called you that?"
But with the sight of the valise and the fear that they might be leaving I thought it best not to quarrel. She had left the window and, going to her dressing table, had picked up her nail file.

"Never mind," I said. "I hope you are not going away. These floods don't last, and they're a benefit. Plenty of the people around here rely on 'em every year to wash out their cellars."
"No, I'm not going away," she replied lazily. "I'm taking that dress to Mrs. Ladley. She is going to wear it in 'Charlie's Aunt' next week. She hasn't half enough of a wardrobe to play leads in stock. Look at this thumb nail, broken to the quick!"

If I had only looked to see which thumb it was! But I was putting the tea tray on the washstand and moving Mr. Ladley's papers to find room for it. Peter, the spaniel, begged for a lump of sugar, and I gave it to him.
"Where is Mr. Ladley?" I asked.
"Gone out to see the river."

"I hope he'll be careful. There's a drowning or two every year in these floods."
"Then I hope he won't," she said calmly. "Do you know what I was doing when you came in? I was looking after his boat and hoping it had a hole in it."
"You won't feel that way tomorrow, Mrs. Ladley," I protested, shocked.
"You're just nervous and put out. Most men have their ugly times. Many a time I wished Mr. Pitman was gone—until he went. Then I'd have given a good bit to have him back again."

She was standing in front of the dresser, fixing her hair over her ears. She turned and looked at me over her shoulder.
"Probably Mr. Pitman was a man," she said. "My husband is a fiend, a devil."
Well, a good many women have said that to me at different times. But just let me say such a thing to them, or repeat their own words to them, the next day, and they would fly at me in a fury. So I said nothing and put the cream into her tea.

I never saw her again.

and taking the candle we went to the staircase. I noticed that it was a minute or so after 2 o'clock as we left the room. The boat was gone, not untied, but cut loose. The end of the rope was still fastened to the stair rail. I sat down on the stairs and looked at Mr. Reynolds.

"It's gone!" I said. "If the house catches fire we'll have to drown."
"It's rather curious when you consider it!" We both spoke softly not to disturb the Ladleys. "I've been awake and I heard no boat come in. And yet if no one came in a boat and came from the street they would have had to swim in."

I felt queer and creepy. The street door was open, of course, and the lights going beyond. It gave me a strange feeling to sit there in the darkness on the stairs, with the arch of the front door like the entrance to a cavern, and see now and then a chunk of ice slide into view, turn around in the eddy and pass on. It was bitter cold, too, and the wind was rising.

"I'll go through the house," said Mr. Reynolds. "There's likely nothing worse the matter than some drunken mill hand on a vacation while the mills are under water. But I'd better look."
He left me, and I sat there alone in the darkness. I had a presentiment of something wrong, but I tried to think it was only discomfort and the cold. The water, driven in by the wind, swirled at my feet. And something dark floated in and lodged on the step below. I reached down and touched it. It was a dead kitten. I had never known a dead cat to bring me anything but bad luck, and here was one washed in at my very feet.

THE FOLLY OF TWO TELEPHONES
THE cities that attempted to secure a better telephone service by introducing a competing telephone system are beginning to realize the folly of their course. The opinion prevailed some years ago that two telephone companies would reduce the price and give better service, but it has been learned by experience that it not only doubles the expense to the people, but it is an awful nuisance. In some cities these double telephone companies secure franchises under the name of cooperative companies, when a number of people organized and secured privileges under certain representations. They were encouraged in their efforts and the public is today paying the price of its folly with an unsatisfactory double system, no one being equipped "telephonically" without paying for both systems, those not having two being at the disadvantage of not being able to talk to those who are on the other line.
