Electricity and Sanitary Methods in Local Dairy
Any one wishing to see how a really clean and sanitary milk busi-ness is conducted should visit the dairy of J. N. Jacobson, about a mile and a half out on the Myrtle Point road. Mr. Jacobson has for several years made a business of supplying milk to the consumers of this city. He has always made a specialty of cleanliness in his line, but it was not until he installed milking machines a year ago that he was able to come up to his ideal in that line. Electric power was cut in on his new plant on April 14, 1914, and after the year's work with it Mr. Jacobson is still enthusiastic as to its success.
A brief description of the plant will be of interest to all who use milk and who are unable to go and see for themselves. To begin with the buildings, the milking room of the barn is planned for cleanliness, which is the watchword of the in-stitution. The cows stand on a slightly sloping floor on each side of the room with a sunken drain between them and the main floor, with their heads confined in the usual manner. Overhead is a system of vacuum pipes for the operation of the machines, also the wiring for electric lights. From the vacuum pipes smaller pipes lead down at intervals convenient for the attach-ment of the machines. The ma-chine itself is a small and compact affair less than a foot in diameter and a few inches high. This is the essential part of the system. It sits on a large conical tin reservoir about 18 inches high and holding about 10 gallons. From the machine a red rubber tube connects with the pipes to bring the suction which operates the system of valves by which the action of the cow's dear little son or daughter is so accurate-ly simulated. Another red rubber tube is provided with four contri-vances which fit over the cows teats, rubber rings insuring a fit that will exclude air. Each machine is pro-vided with two of these tubes, and two cows are milked at once.
As witnessed by the Herald man one day last week, the cows are driven in and find their places. Then Mr. Jacobson gets busy with a bucket of water and a cloth that looks far whiter than our office towels and carefully washes the teats and udder of the cow. Then the machine is set between two of them, near their fore feet; the tube is snapped upon the pipe, a valve turned and the machine at once commences to "suck." The four other jiggers that make that end of the machine remind one of the ten-tacles of a devilish are slipped upon the teats of the cows and the op-eration of extracting the lactal fluid and depositing it in the large receptacle commences. The other tentacle is attached to the other cow and no further attention is required until the operation is completed and the cow is milked. Then the other machine is placed in operation on two other cows in the same manner. At the last a little hand stripping is necessary, as the machine will not take the last few drops of the richest milk.
The operation of the machine is by straight suction, continued about as long as the taking of a long breath, then the opening of a valve lets the air in again and releases the pressure for a second or so, the whole thing being well designed to lull the cow to repose with the idea that it is her own offspring that is getting his ration—except that it neither slobbers nor bunts. It seems that one machine invented does a little massage and slobbering act, but those used by Mr. Jacobson are so quiet, dainty and lady-like in operation that there is no suggestion of uncleanness. As a matter of fact, there is no possible chance for the milk to become contaminated, as it is deposited in the receptacle covered by the machine without being exposed to the air.

The operation of milking one cow is done by a machine in a little less time than would be occupied in do-ing it by hand, and as it milks two at once and one man can tend at least two machines, there is a great economy in its use. As a matter of history, Mr. Jacobson was being as-sisted the other day by his jolly wife, and it must be recorded that she seemed to enjoy the confidence of the cows fully as much as he did. But the animals prefer the machine to hand milking. One of Mr. Jacob-son's cows is noted for her ability and propensity to biff the milking man behind the ear at frequent in-tervals, but she stands quietly throughout her session with the machine. Another of the bovines, a young one, has never had a chance for comparison, for she has never been milked by hand at all.
All offal from the barn is carried well away from the building by a metal carrier running on a tight wire and dumping automatically at the end of its run. The floor of the milking department is washed every morning with the hose and is much cleaner than that of the ordinary warehouse. The approaches to the barn are also planked so that the mudholes usually seen about a stable do not develop.
As the milking receptacles are filled they are emptied into ordinary ten gallon milk cans. When milking is done the milk is taken to the milk house a few feet away and is poured into the top of a contrivance by which it is made to run in a thin film down the outside of a large tin cone inside of which a stream of water makes for coolness. This not only cools the milk but aerates it and allows the escape of gases that would otherwise injure the milk. Then the portion needed for that purpose is run through the separator and the balance is careful-ly sealed in the small bottles in which it is delivered to the custom-ers. Nowhere along the line is there a chance for the milk to be-come contaminated, and those who get their milk from Mr. Jacobson can feel the utmost confidence that it is perfectly clean, wholesome and sanitary. As soon as the milking is finished the milking machines are thoroughly washed and are then placed in a tank containing an an-tiseptic solution, where they remain until wanted again, when they are taken out and thoroughly rinsed in running water before being used.
Power for the plant is provided by a two-horsepower electric motor, installed by Manager McKenna, of the Oregon Power Co. and getting its juice from the Myrtle Point power line running close by. The motor operates the pump for the vacuum system, which also includes a vacuum tank provided with a safety valve to keep the suction from be-coming too strong. The motor also operates a pump for the water sys-tem, which does away with the need of a tank, as a turn of the switch starts the stream of water, and with this water everything about the place is kept as fresh and clean as possible.

Mr. Jacobson is certainly a pro-gressive citizen whose plant, though not extremely large, is a credit to the city, and whose efforts to supply us with a pure and wholesome arti-cle of the food product which by is most liable to contamina-tion should be fully appreciated our citizens.
County Agriculturist Smith re-turned Saturday from Tenmile, where he spent several days of work preliminary to the organization of a cow-testing association in that iso-lated but rich and beautiful section.
