In Brewster Valley
On Sunday, the 8th, a crowd of Brewster valley young people went to Lost creek falls and had a very pleasant time.
"THE JOLLY ROMPERS."
To Lost creek is the place to roam if you should have the leisure; it seems to be a butterfly's home. We sure found it a pleasure.
We sixteen Jolly Rompers With our comical little bundles Started out to see the falls And picnic in the jungles.
When first we reached our goal We all admired the view But we soon thought of our dinner And peddled the spuds to stew.
Below the falls we spread our lunch Of everything we knew; But Clyde got the most of all Because he stole the stew.
After lunch the fun began When everyone got busy. The way Ed switched his camera 'round Made everybody dizzy.
We stood to have our pictures snapped And all tried not to wiggle But we fear the nicest plate was spoiled By Mary's merry giggle.
Myrtle started in to talk And talked till she was through. She pounced around upon the rocks Till she was black and blue.
Verna went a-fishing, And you should have heard her squeals When she caught the first she ever caught; And we know how big she feels.
Everybody picked on Etta And she wondered why they should, She's such a timid little girl We don't see how they could.
Clifford spread the supper And it made the table groan But he absentmindedly started in To eat it all alone.
When darkness came we settled down For a night of dreamy bliss And Zilpha put the dog to bed, What a tender little miss.
Jack told a cougar story Till our hair began to raise And we hugged around the camp-fire 'Till we nearly killed the blaze.
We heard a little screech owl Away off in the bushes. Said Mildred, "That's a cougar, I can hear him snap his tusches."
Then everybody balked at once To show how brave we were And Julius said, "I will grab his tail And pull out all his fur."
Then Linnie stirred the feathers And made a crazy bed. And Harley slept with a he-haw, " 'Twas the Landlord's fault," he said.
At midnight young Tom arose, Put on the coffee pot. Saying, "Come, ye coffee toppers And we'll have some, boiling hot."
When morning came we packed again. There were tears in Ernest's eye. He said, "We've got acquainted now, I hate to say goodbye."
Said Ethel, as we turned to go, "I could stay here forever. Give me the company I could choose And I would leave here never."
Halfway up the mountain Everyone was feeling fagged Till we struck a yellow jacket's nest, Then everybody ragged.
Goodby Old Falls, we love you, Some day we will return, We'll often see you in our dreams, For you our hearts will yearn.
