Frank Hall visits Coquille

Jockey Frank Hall, known on about every race course on the Pacific coast as "Shorty" Hall, came drifting into town Saturday. He has been absent for about three years and came back to visit his mother and see his old friends.

During his absence he has been with Wild West shows, a circus or two and has been galloping the ponies with some of the best jockeys on the coast. He has been all the way from Pendleton to Mexico. He came here from Mexico and expects to return there within a short time.

He says that things are lively on the Mexican border just over the line where the big races are being pulled off. He says that of all the states on the outside Nevada is far the best. His brother, "Broncho" Bob who lived at this place for some time, is now buying up horses for the French cavalry. Both the boys are horsemen clear through.

"Shorty" riding some of the best horses on the coast, while his brother took fourth prize at the Pendleton Round-up last year among 121 cow punchers from all parts of the world.

Although "Shorty" has been in the hospital several times from various accidents all the way from wrecked automobiles to bucking bronchos, he still looks just the same as when he left here three years ago.

What is in it?

Albert Johnson, proprietor of the Coquille Soda Works, and C. A. Machon appeared before Justice Stanley this morning by request. They had been charged with handling and dispensing a beverage under the name of cider that had intoxicating propensities. The beverage had been bought by Machon of Johnson in a keg that now bears a penciled assurance that it is guaranteed under the pure food and drugs act. There has been talk for some time that a man or even a boy or girl could accumulate a jag by imbibing of this cider, and the matter finally came to a head as noted. A test will be made of the cider to see what is wrong with it; and the matter will come up again in justice court next Thursday morning.

Dangerous Tree

About a mile above this city on the Myrtle Point road there is a large cedar tree which is taking a dangerous slant toward the road and looks as though it is likely to fall at any minute. If it ever does, it will put the telephone lines out of commission, and as it is near where the road has already caved in quite a lot, it is liable to cave in more of the road, besides entirely blocking it and it is also likely to kill or seriously injure some traveler.

"Duke" Miller Well Smoked

John Miller suffered a slight attack of pneumonia the first of last week which has laid him up for awhile. He is improving rapidly and will soon be about again. One day soon after he was taken ill his brothers secured a small coal oil stove which they took up to his room at the Baxter. The brothers' hearts were in the right place but "Duke" objected to this means of heating up his room. Nevertheless the stove was lit up, but as soon as they left the room, Duke crawled out of bed and turned it out. After awhile the boys returned and insisted on warming him up again, and the stove was again pressed into service. The boys left and a feeling drowsy "Duke" fell asleep without turning out the stove. When he awoke it was with a feeling of being submerged in a coal mine, and of the mine being on fire at that. He couldn't see a foot in front of him for smoke. He was half strangled but he got out of bed. He had to feel about in the dense smoke several minutes before he could locate the stove. When Charlie Baxter entered the room a few minutes later it looked like a smoke house and "Duke" resembled a huge smoked ham. He had rings of black clear around his chin and several across his face. The smoke had somewhat lifted and hung in great clouds to the ceiling where it mingled with cobwebs and presented an appearance similar to a scene from Dante's Inferno in a movie play. "Duke" looked like a big bear smoked out of his den and he was about as cross as one. What he said about that stove and his two loving, thoughtful brothers sounded awful strong to come from a sick man. It is safe to say that no more coal oil stoves will be taken to Duke's room.

A Slick One

A few days ago Constable H. W. Dunham went over to the B. and brought over Henry Lloyd whom he has been holding here pending the arrival of another boy, and will take the pair of them to the Home of Correction. Henry is being sent to the school for stealing, and since the constable has had him in his charge there is no doubt in his mind that the boy is guilty. With Dunham and his clerk both with their eyes on the lad he has lifted about 12 dollars' worth of tobacco from Dunham's pool hall. He has stolen everything all the way from Gato cigars to 100 packages of wheat straw cigarette papers. Besides doing all this he kicked his foot through a $2 glass in one of the show cases in the pool hall as he was making a get away with a load of cigars. Hark says that he has seen slick ones in his time but that Henry has the world beat. During his few days' stay here he has supplied every small boy in town, that is inclined that way with "the makings." He has done a regular wholesale business. Not only has he relieved Hark of things but has also sampled the goods at Hick's Cafe and tasted some of Leneve's chewing tobacco. Hark says that he can take him in any place and right before your eyes he'll load up with things and you'll never see him do it. He says that if the officers don't look out he will steal half of the institution at Salem when he gets there.

River on the Rise

The warm south wind and rain which visited this section the last of the week evidently made an impression on the snow which was banked upon the hills southeast of here. The river started to rise Saturday night and came up at a rate of about four feet an hour at Myrtle Point. By Sunday morning it was still rising at this place, and all the low spots between here and Myrtle Point on the road were overflowing and this put the auto stages off the run. Coquille's mail going east was dispatched on the Steamer Myrtle yesterday. The train went through to Powers and brought the eastern mail down yesterday evening. This morning the water was several feet higher than yesterday. Where there was plenty of green grass showing across the river yesterday, today there is nothing but water. All the stock have been driven into the barns on that side on the farms that border on the river. The water is several inches higher than it was at the last freshet and is still rising. The eastern mail came down on the steamer Myrtle this morning. The snow again began to drift down this morning and the weather has again taken on a cold aspect. This will probably put an end to the warm rain and cause the water to fall, but it is quite likely that most of the people would prefer high water to the cold and snow.

It may be remarked that it is extremely difficult to get authentic information as to freshet conditions—if you ask more than one man. The first one will give a good story, but the next man will tell you an entirely different tale.

High School Debate

Next Friday evening at the High school the local school will contest for honors in debate with representatives from the Myrtle Point High school. The question to be discussed is, "Resolve 1, that the essential features of the Swiss system of military training and service should be adopted by the United States." Merton Tyrrell and Leslie Schroeder will uphold the affirmative of this question at the debate here while Mary Levar and Myrtle Cunningham will argue for the negative at North Bend. Music for the program here will be furnished by the Glee Club and the High school orchestra.

There should be a large crowd on hand at the school house to hear the speeches of our young debaters. No outside activity of the school is more valuable to the participants than the debate work and everything possible should be done to encourage it. The price of admission will be fifteen cents.
