Co-operative System of Marketing

During the last year fifty carloads of livestock and 40,000 pounds of wool, valued at $100,000, have been sold in the Portland market on the co-operative plan by C. J. Hurd, marketmaster for the farmers of Lane county. Mr. Hurd, acting for a committee under the auspices of the Lane County Pomona Grange, attends to the business of shipping and selling the farmers' products. Farmers are in the habit of telephoning him what they have to sell, and when he has enough of one product to make up a carload he notifies them when to deliver. The cars are made at Eugene, usually on Tuesdays. The expense to the farmer is slight. Each consignor bears his share, apportioned on a pro rata basis. In addition to the actual freight and cartage expense, the committee charges $10 per car to defray operating expenses. The small shipper thus enjoys practically the same freight rates as the big shipper. By selling direct to Portland he gets the highest market price. "Our business system is simple," said Mr. Hurd. "When the farmer delivers his product we give him a receipt which specifies the product and its weight. When the sale has been made we mail him his check and a statement showing the total value of his product, his proportion of the marketing expense, and the net value. All he has to do is to deliver his product at the Guard. The co-operative marketing plan has been in operation for a year and is proving itself very popular, states Mr. Hurd. Products come in even from remote parts of the county.—Eugene Guard.

Lyons & Jones

"Where your dollar does double duty"
