A local duck hunter makes the claim that while hunting recently he encountered nine hunters in the marshes and saw only three ducks. It looks as though the odds were against the ducks this year.

Miss Ann Holland and Miss Miller, two telephone operators from Marshfield, came over Tuesday to take the election returns for the Ko-Keel Klub. They returned to their homes Thursday morning.

Elton Tyrrell, a former resident of this place received a severe beating at the hands of a gang of union men at Oakland, Calif. The gang resented Mr. Tyrrell's accepting work while a strike was on. Any union man laboring at Oakland is protected by an armed guard to keep the strikebreakers from wreaking vengeance upon him.

A story comes to the Herald to the effect that the Ford Bros. auto stage, going toward Bandon last evening ran into a big buck in the road and knocked him down, and that only the closed season prevented the animal from finding a tragic death forthwith. Laus Leneve has been remarking that the deer all seemed to know when the open season ended. This fellow seems to have had more courage than discretion.

It is predicted that at the end of this war Europe will be in a state of anarchy. That will be quite an improvement over present conditions.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Law Will Work Hardship

The beef cattle business, one of the industries of Coos county, was demoralized and made practically impossible by the vote of the people at the election and the dairy business was seriously affected. The same applies to the sheep and goat industry.

The people were called upon to vote for and against allowing stock to run at large and for and against hogs running at large. It was expected that the hog measure would be defeated but the people voting against cattle running at large makes the industry next to impossible.

The vote for cattle was 1,811 and against 2,764. The vote for hogs was 733 and against 4,128.

Coos county is different from other parts of the country where there are large fields which are fenced and stockmen keep their cattle up. The only way it is possible to raise beef cattle in this locality is to allow them to range in the woods and over the hills and rough lands which are good for nothing else. Much of such land has been used as free ranch. The feeding of the cattle has a tendency to aid rather than anything else as the stock keep down the undergrowth, which makes fire dangers in the timber.

These rough lands will feed large herds of cattle. Even if they are owned the fencing is not practical. It requires a large area, much larger than on prairie land, and the fencing of the rough land which is owned would be too expensive.

Without cattle running at large over the unproductive hills and timber the raising of beef is practically impossible excepting where a few head can be kept up under fence. But even that is not practical as the land worth fencing is too valuable to use for such pasturage. The case is exactly the same with sheep.

By the passage of this law there will be a vast area which will be unproductive and which otherwise could bring great wealth as a cattle and sheep feeding area.

The law also works a hardship upon the dairymen as in most cases the dairy cows are allowed to roam at large and secure milk producing feed whereas they must now be confined within fences. Many of the dairymen will be curtailed in their operations.

The passage of the law is ruinous to the farmers who handle livestock.

With the hogs it is different as there are few territories where hogs need be at large excepting in the free ranges of the oak lands of Curry county.

In Coos county the term "stock" is generally meant to apply to cattle. It is a local misnomer. When a farmer here speaks of stock he usually means cattle but this is wrong as stock means in reality domestic live stock of any kind.

The fact that there was one proposition relating to hogs and another to "stock" it is not unlikely that whoever was responsible meant cattle rather than sheep or other animals. Whatever he meant would have no effect. The dictionary gives the definition of "stock" as "domestic animals raised or used on the farm especially cattle, hogs, sheep, etc."

The law being carried that "stock" cannot run at large means that nothing in the way of domestic animals can run at large or in other words must be kept under a fence.

There is only one way in which the farmers might get around it. That would be to keep all herds of cattle or flocks of sheep in charge of a herder. In the higher courts it would very likely be held that stock under the care of a herd master would not be regarded as being at large. This plan, however, would probably be too expensive and too impractical for a locality like Coos county. It could only be done by the richer of the stockmen who have large herds. The small farmer with limited capital and small herds could not do it.—Harbor.
