VOL. II. ASHLAND, JACKSON COUNTY, OREGON, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1889. NO. 28.

PRESSED BRICKS.
The best cigars at the Soda Fountain.
Fresh hand-made candles at the Soda Fountain.
In Kentucky prohibition is known as a hydrant-headed monster.
Good team, wagon and harness for sale cheap by Martin & Harris.
Handsome stationary in the latest styles for society use at Burckhalter & Hasty's.
Parties having accounts against P. H. Donoghue for fruit will please present them.
Jesse Grant, son of General Grant, and wife are temporarily residents of Alameda, California.
F. M. Mingo has purchased T. A. Harris' interest in the agricultural implement house at Medford.
Eugene claims to have erected 150 new buildings at an expenditure of $200,000 this year. Pretty good for an interior town.
Mrs. Leland Stanford testified to her approval of the project of purchasing and restoring Father's farm by subscribing $500 for that purpose.
Hon. A. C. Jones, receiver of the U. S. land office at Roseburg, will remove to Baker City as soon as his successor is appointed and qualified.
Mr. Durbin of Salem, is 90 years old, and his good wife is 96. They settled in Oregon in 1844. The old gentleman is active for one of so great an age.
The appraisers of the estate of David G. Terry have filed their report which places the value of the estate at $12,456.12. This is outside of incumbrances of any kind.
The Baker City councilmen have voted themselves a salary of sixty dollars each for the year. The mayor gets the same. If an Ashland council would do it there would be a great big kick on that.
A fishing boat containing two men, F. Peterson and J. Jagny, captured on the bar at Coos bay on Friday, and both were drowned. The boat and gear were picked up by the life-saving service on the edge of the south spit.
Eva Ingersoll, daughter of Col. Robert Ingersoll, married Walden G. Brown, a New York lawyer. Thursday. There was no religious ceremony. They simply agreed in the presence of witnesses to become man and wife.
The laws of Dakota provide that any person who will provide a watering trough beside the highway, shall be allowed a credit of five dollars a year on his land tax, and an additional three dollars where a bucket and a cup is provided.
The fact that "blood will tell" is proudly illustrated by the fact that Paul S. Jay-Eye and Samuel are bred and related to each other. All three of those famous flyers are direct descendants of the great Lexington and Hambletonian.
The Red Cross Cough Cure, made by Chas. Wright & Co., is especially adapted for deep seated colds, where there is pain in the chest, and tendency to pneumonia or pleurisy. It will stop a hacking night cough immediately. Sold by T. K. Bolton.
Two milk cows harnessed to a buggy formed a part of an immigrant outfit that passed through Baker City the other day. The old gentleman who from the East, risked over this quaker looking team, now that he has made his trip "the plains across," can settle down and go to raising cattle.
The National Orange Patrons of Husbandry is in session at Sacramento, Cal., and many of the delegates from the East will visit Oregon on their way home. They realize that their Western trip could not be complete without a visit to the great Northwest, and will arrange to come this way when the association adjourns.
The Ashland holders of mining claims on Cottonwood near the Klamath river, are boring with an artesian well machine to get down to the "blue lead," which they hope to strike within 300 or 400 feet of the surface. This blue lead is the supposed best of any region so long ago that even "Lish Applegate has forgotten" just where it did run.
Traveling stones are now found in Nevada as well as in Australia. They are round and of all sizes. When they are put away from each other a couple of feet they will commence to roll toward each other until they get together. This is caused by mineral in them that is attractive.
An Oregon City man with the euphonious title of John Smith advertises in the Courier after this original fashion: "I want a wife, to weigh 200 pounds more or less; age 50 or 55; some property." An advertising man nearly always accomplishes his end by nearly certain to get the property desired.
Are we to have a war of towers? Senator Hearst is reported as saying the other day: "When the Elythe estate property has been settled, so that a title can be given to the Market street property, I propose to buy it and put up a building so high that I can stand on the dome and throw a string to Mike DeYoung who stands on the tower of the Chronicle building.
Preliminary surveys have been completed from Eugene to Florence, a distance of 50 miles of way has been secured. Contracts will not be let until next season. A. C. Hovey of Eugene, is president of the road and the general agent is now in New York for the purpose of negotiating with some of the overland companies for the building of the line from the bay to eastern connections.
The fancy prices southern Oregon fruit has brought in the markets the last few years, has wiped out all doubts heretofore existing. Many land owners are making preparations to set out large orchards. It certainly will pay. Next spring if the citizens want apples it now looks like they will have to ship them. And if they are fortunate enough to secure the same apples they are now shipping out, they will have choice fruit, but freight two ways will make them a luxury.
Speaking of the late second crops of strawberries in this valley, the Courier says: "It is nothing unusual for a season and crop in this valley earlier in the season, but the second crop as late as Nov. 10 is something out of the usual custom. While the country is not altogether to blame for our strawberry season being so short as the cultivation and irrigation. Strawberries do well in all parts of Oregon, and especially Southern Oregon and our season is also longer than in other parts; still, by proper cultivation, the season could be prolonged.
Parents should be careful that their children do not contract colds during the fall or early winter months. Such colds weaken the lungs and sin-passages, making the child much more likely to contract other colds during the winter. It is this succession of colds that causes catarrh and bronchitis or paves the way for consumption. Should a cold be contracted, loose no time, but cure it as quickly as possible. A fifty-cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will cure any cold in a few days and leave the respiratory organs strong and healthy. For sale by Chitwood Bros.

MORALITY OR PROPRIETY.
When the Beecher trial was in progress, an eminent New England jurist said that the women witnesses on both sides did not appear to know the difference between virtue and a mere sense of fashionable propriety. That they seemed that an intrigue with a man of genius, pretending by virtue of pulp eloquence to be an oracle of the God he insulted by his impurity, was a venial offence compared with sinning with mediocrity in shape of your neighbor? The vice is intemperance, but when a man sneaks in through the back door, I am inclined to think a little less of him and a little more of the front door."
We quote:
"In my opinion it is had enough to drink in a saloon under any circumstances, but when a man sneaks in through the back door, I am inclined to think a little less of him and a little more of the front door."
Let us get down to moral bedrock. Why is it had to drink in a saloon in any circumstance? Why is it any worse to drink in a saloon, if you do not drink intemperately, than to drink at home, behind your own door or the blinds of your neighbor? The vice is intemperance, whether you drink at home or abroad; and it is quite as vicious at home as abroad. And here is just where this pinchbeck society virtue, this propriety purity comes in. It is not good form to drink in a saloon, even if you are temperate in your indulgence, but it is at least condonable if you fill it up at home. This mistaken sense of propriety calls a man who drinks wine at dinner a gentleman while it stigmatizes the man who drinks wine in a saloon as a vulgar creature. But no man can feel other than contempt for the moral judgment of persons who drink saloon drinking as a sin and home drinking as a virtue. There is a tide here, and it is the only drinking that is defensible is that which never trenches on sober thought, speech and action; and when drinking does trench on sobriety it is indecent and immoral, at home and abroad.—Oregonian.

EDITORIAL NOTES.
Wait for me at Campbell's gate sweet Bill Mahone.—Forker.
One by one the "daisies" fall. What a cluster of them, rare, beautiful and sweet, fell this year. Tanner, Forker, Mahone. When shall these three meet again?
The San Francisco Argonaut asserts that the negro is not fit for citizenship and demands his disfranchisement. The American party is hereafter to be a white man's party.
Harvey Scott rises to explain that Forker was of the Tanner stripe and talked too much. Harvey always was a cheerful man at a funeral, as democrats who have read his obituary notices can truly testify.
The Boulangist element in French politics seems only capable of creating a small ripple of expectant excitement, but nowhere near any demonstration that threatens the government, or even the return of the doughty general to Paris.
The Chicago anarchists in their decoration services this year on the anniversary of the execution of the Haymarket murderers, were very much subdued. They are beginning to learn that bomb throwing is not the way to reform abuses.
Senator Fry favors the acquisition of the Sandwich and Samoan islands, the annexation of Canada, and the assertion of exclusive right to the waters of Behring sea. If Senator Fry were president we would have to do some fighting to maintain the policy he has just outlined.
A Selma man went into a store last week and put a lighted cigar on the edge of an aquarium. A goldfish seized it and took a puff. For several days the poor thing lay at the bottom of the tank and panted like a tired dog. Its color changed to jet black, and the owner of the cigarette has sworn off for keeps.

THE COLONIES AND THE CREEDS
The oration of Daniel Dougherty at the opening of the great Catholic congress in Baltimore is subject to misjudgment as reported by wire. As reported it reads like a criticism of the United States and their impachment of official tolerance of Catholicism. It is not fair to let run unchallenged the assertion that the spirit of colonial persecution was projected beyond colonial times, or the inference that while it lasted it was in any sense of American origin, derived from our soil and expressive of the genius of our people. Now is it fair to permit the inference that Catholics alone were the victims of that evil tendency to persecute for opinion's sake which was the most appalling blemish on the strong character of the Puritans. The peace of the republic is not promoted by telling over again the story of religious contention, to excite a feeling of resentment, of conquest and of ill-fellowship in the breasts of any who worship God now, unsheltered, under the protection of our tolerant constitution. If every land on earth were as generous in protecting the rights of conscience as ours; if the same tolerance were in all nations extended to the religious beliefs it would be well for emancipated men. The tolerance was not a virtue of the colonies was due to the fact that they were peopled by refugees from every form of religious persecution in Europe. The religious feuds which have been there in progress for many centuries, in which tens of thousands of the followers had gone prayerfully to death in flames, prayerfully lit by other followers of Christ, equally sincere, were transplanted to the American colonies with unabated bitterness, and with the rancor rising with the power to punish all who dared to differ from the theocratic government which was established. The Huguenots came smarting under the revocation of the edict of Nantes. The Puritans arrived with their passions edged by the persecutions of the English church. The Baptists came convinced that as persecution had confirmed their faith as non-conformists, persecution of others by them would not convert others, hence were tolerant and merciful. The Quakers, non-resistant, brought their spirit, their belief in one God and no more, their patience and righteousness of life, escaping from English jails, pillories and stocks. The Catholics came frightened by the violence of that reaction in Europe which had overwhelmed them in the English Revolution; and later on the non-jurors of the English church landed, the men who followed the bishop who had refused to take the oath of allegiance to William of Orange, as commanded by the convention of 1688. The religious kettle of Europe, in short, boiled over upon the New World. Here the contention was renewed. The Puritans got the upper hand in Massachusetts and began the task of getting even with all who differed from them. Persecution began in the spirit of the Golden Rule, after a fashion, for they proceeded to do unto others as they would be done unto. Having decided that they were the servants of the Lord they smote all others as his enemies. Then Roger Williams raised the standard of toleration, and Quakers, Baptists, Catholics, members of the church of England, non-jurors and all who fled before the sword, of the Lord and of Gilead, who the infuriated Puritans were plying like a cleaver in a slaughter-house, ran off to Rhode Island. Lord Baltimore's grant, colonized by Catholics, also set an example of toleration, which the purely Catholic governments of Europe were hot wits to follow, and to the two belong the credit of permitting man in the New World to approach his God in his own way suited to his taste and his conscience. Finally, the ran-or and the venom of religious contention evaporated in the face of a common danger which threatened all sects alike. Religious differences are more imaginary than real, and they readily cease to be the master motive of men when their material concerns are threatened. With the Jews of the Old Testament, religion was a thing of this life. Divine wrath or affection were to them manifest in the flesh. Their God smote them in His anger; He comforted them in His love. Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple epitomizes the faith and the hope of Israel, and it applies to us as well as to them. In this respect we are all Jews. A blow at things seen ends our persecution of each other over things unseen. When the substance we have is threatened we forget our quarrels and join to defend our materialities. So when England attacked our substance we quit quarreling about our shadows, and the Scotch-Irish Presbyterian Knox, the Puritan Adams, the Moravian Mullerberg, the Catholic Carroll of Carrollton, the Unitarian Jefferson, the Quaker Mifflin, the Episcopalian Washington, the Free Thinker Tom Paine, the Huguenot Jay and the Baptist Whipple, who raised the first American flag in the Thames, aligned with each other in the defense of civil liberty and to create a government dedicated thereto, with as much confidence in each other as if they had always partaken of the same communion and prayed at the same altar. Out of their united efforts issued the United States, a secular government, recognizing no form of religious belief, tolerating them all. Its institutions demand for them perpetuity, freedom of conscience, separation of Church and State, absolute security in education in the common schools; therefore these are founded in its genius and established by its laws. This great and impressive Catholic congress is met to show the great prosperity of that ancient church under these conditions of government. It boasts, with reason, that its growth has outrun the growth of the country itself. This being true, its duty to the government under which it has prospered and had peace of body and mind, is in this congress, which meets under the eye of a prince of the church, to feelingly and strongly commend all the nations of Europe and the world that they may follow the example of the United States; that they may grant liberty of conscience, religious toleration, separation of Church and State, and secure the absolute security of education in common schools, accessible on common terms to rich and poor.

MOHON BARRIARITIES.
The first struggle for supremacy in Salt Lake city between the Mormon and Gentile element will come off at the municipal election Feb. 10th. A Salt Lake dispatch says: Last Friday a Mormon named John Moore made application for admission to citizenship. He swore that he was a Mormon and had been through the Endowment house. Objection was made to his admission on the ground that parties going through that house were compelled to take an oath which was incompatible with their becoming good, law-abiding citizens of the United States. The court granted a continuance until this morning, when the case was again taken up. The witnesses were principally apostates.
John Bond told that he went through the endowment house in January, 1868, and took the obligation to obey the "question in everything temporal, spiritual, political, social and financial. Witness testified that the penalty for the violation of the oath and divulging the oath was death by cutting the throat from ear to ear and cutting out the heart and tongue, and disemboweling. In the Endowment house he solemnly swore in the presence of Almighty God that he would avenge the blood of Joseph Smith, the first president and prophet of the Mormon church, on the American nation, and that he would teach the same to his children and his children's children, and that he would have vengeance forever begun and carry out the hostility against this nation, and keep the same a profound secret.
The next witness was Martin D. Waddell, who for a long time was superintendent of the church carpentering work at Pittsburg, Pa., in 1847, and came to Utah shortly afterwards. Witness stated that he had refused to take the oath to obey the priesthood in all things. As to whether he ever saw the penalty inflicted for violating the oath, witness swore that he saw a man who had apostatized named Green, have his throat cut from ear to ear. He gave the full details of the crime. Several others testified substantially in the same manner.
Quite a sensation was caused when Charles Gilmore was called to the stand. He asked to be excused from testifying, on the ground that if he divulged the Endowment house oaths his wife would stand forfeit to the church, and while he cared for himself, he did for his wife and family. The court thought the government was abundantly able to protect him, and he was required to testify. He related how he was bathed and anointed in going through the endowment house, and told how an old cavalry sabre was exhibited under a peculiar light, so as to make a ghastly sight when the oath was taken. He described the oaths and penalties in detail.
Levi P. Morton, liquor seller.
Vice President Morton is building a hotel in Washington. Recently he applied to the authorities of the District of Columbia for a license to deal in wine and spirituous liquors at "The Shoreham," which is the name of his hotel. The New York Times is disposed to shy stones at the Vice President, and asks: "Has it come to this? 'L. P. Morton, Vice President and liquor seller?'
We submit that Mr. Morton has not departed from the platform upon which he was elected. The temperance plank of the Republican platform declares as follows: "The first concern of all good government is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of their homes. The Republican party cordially sympathizes with all wise and well-directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality."

THE TIDE COMES IN.
Many citizens of Portland, if asked whether there is any perceptible rise and fall of the tide here, would answer that there is not. There is a tide here, and at the present time, owing to the low stage of the rivers, the rise and fall is about three feet.
Steamboat men and all who work on or along the rivers understand all about the tide here, when the Columbia is in flood, amounts to nothing, but at other times varies from one to two feet. And when, as at present, both the Willamette and the Columbia are at an unusually low stage, it rises to about three feet. The men employed in the construction of the mouth of the Johnson street sewer, at low water mark on the Willamette river, have to retire when the flowing tide comes in, and return again when it goes out, so they are well aware how high it rises.
On the 22d of December, the winter solstice, the shortest day in the year, there will be a tide of the unusual height of 9 feet 7 inches at Astoria, and if, as is quite probable, there is a strong gale on shore, it may be one or two feet higher, and owners of water craft, wharves, tide land, etc., will be on the lookout to see what danger is avoided. It is likely the tide will be unusually high here on that day, but not high enough to do any damage.

Roseburg Stage Held Up.
Roseburg, Or., Nov. 13.—The stage running between Roseburg and Sumner, Coos county, carrying the United States mail, was held up by a lone highwayman to-day at five o'clock. He was dressed in a long black gown with a mask over his face. The stage was about a quarter of a mile from the summit when the man stepped from behind a large stump, leveled a pistol at the driver, giving a command to hold on. The highwayman then took the mail sacks, cut them open, poured out the letters, took all thought to be valuable, searched the stage, put the rest back and told the driver to move on and not dare to look back. The stage then proceeded on its way, telegraphing to the authorities from the Laids, the first stage station. There were no passengers aboard.
The morning stage arrived all right, and had aboard a large amount of money which was no doubt the one he was after.
The Law on Road Guides.
Persons unacquainted with the public roads of the country are greatly annoyed by not finding guide boards erected at all of the intersections of main roads. The maintenance of guide boards is made incumbent on the county road supervisor, and his failure to do so is punishable by an admonitory fine. The law regulating these guide boards is as follows: Sec. 4084. "Every supervisor shall erect and keep up at the forks of every highway and every crossing of public roads within his road district a guide or finger board, containing an inscription in legible letters directing the way and specifying the distance to the next town or public place situated on each road respectively."
It makes the writer shudder for the road supervisors when he sees how unlawfully negligent they are without a single known exception.—Statesman.
