

The Mercury wants the census enumerator to count the political editor of the Oregonian twice—once for protection and once for free trade.

A Yreka hotel man advertises: "You'll find the drummers there." That might do to draw in Yreka, but over here it would cause a stampede to the other hotel.

Voltaire, in answering a request to sit for a statue, writes: "I am no longer the possessor of what might be called a face. I look like a baked apple on the top of a crane's neck."

The humorist, Geo. W. Peck, of "Pec's Bad Boy" fame, has been nominated by the democrats of Wisconsin for governor, but the republicans of that state will find nothing funny in such candidacy.

The hop louse it is said has appeared in Lane county. A spray of strong caustic water will kill them, or a strong solution of soap-suds and tobacco water. Potash or caustic soda, though, is the best.

The recent census shows quite a healthy increase in the population of the South in the last ten years. Fourteen Southern states show an increase of 4,000,000. Texas leads with an increase of 600,000, and Missouri comes next with 400,000.

In I. D. Driver's lecture on "Social Purify" at San Francisco, he remarked: "If you want to make a great man begin with the body. If you build a fine ship you must have a good hull. If a man wants to be respected and esteemed he must look to his actions and keep mentally and morally clean." In conclusion the speaker said: "The devil buys souls with gold and lust, but there is not enough gold or lust to buy a soul for the devil without the owner's consent."

Parties who have been searching for the wreck of the Brother Johnathan are certain that they have located the resting place of the old ship; but the wreck lies in deep water, and with the diving apparatus in use on this coast it is impossible to raise her. A diver went down, and after some search, found portions of the old ship. Most of the hull is gone to decay or is buried in the drifts of sand. It is therefore probable that all is now known that will ever be known of the ill-fated steamer that cost so many their lives that on Sunday in July of 1865, until the time comes when the sea shall give up its dead. It is supposed that a large amount of treasure went down with the ship which, if true, will forever be eliminated from the wealth of the world.—C. C. News.

Congressman Wilson of Washington, who recently made a personal assault on old man Beckwith in the house, is a peevish, offensive, insulting and belligerent citizen, always ready to fight. The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Herald has this: "A few weeks ago Wilson became angry at Congressman Hermann, of Oregon, because that gentleman, as a member of the committee on rivers and harbors, had failed to put into the bill as large an appropriation as Wilson wanted for the Columbia river. Hermann is about twice the size of Wilson, but when the pair met in the corridor Wilson shook his fist under Hermann's nose and backed him into a corner and applied to him a large number of epithets. Hermann tried to get away, but the peevish little gentleman from Washington pinned his victim to the wall and vented his spleen to his heart's content, greatly to the amusement of a large crowd of onlookers."

Duncan B. Harrison, author of the play that John L. Sullivan, the ex-bruiner, is starring in, is not entirely unknown in Ashland. One Sunday afternoon about a year ago, when the depot platform was filled with town people to see the train, Harrison, who was to play in Portland and the night following was exercising himself with two other gentlemen, and one of the pet dogs they had on a long thin chain. Harrison was recovering from a broken leg. They were encountering the dog to run up and snap at the boys at the depot. One of the kids didn't like it and as the dog rushed up milkily kicked him off. Harrison, who is a powerful man, made two powerful blows in the crowd and slapped him. Everybody considered it a brutal outrage and Col. Bowditch quickly diagnosed the victim's condition and whisked for the police, upon whose arrival he made a verbal complaint against the theatrical John Doe for assault and battery. Harrison's two companions were delicately urging him to keep his tongue and get into the car. An exciting scene ensued, the main features of which were a crying kid, a show expecting to be called, a policeman trying to make peace, with humble Christian methods, a colored fellow demanding an eye for an eye and the powerful actor with a broken leg but an immense amount of moral courage vividly depicting the complaining witness and endeavoring by every means to provoke him into a breach of the peace, and treating the officer with silent contempt. The train commenced moving and he cut out uttering a string of abuse. Few men in the land are possessed with the nerve to have successfully stood off this crowd under the circumstances. It was a case of assault from a high stand point and morally he should have been punished by all means. No man in the crowd knew what or who he was.

We are pained to be under the necessity of chronicling the death of Frank, son of David and Mollie Kincaid, who departed this life Sept. 8, 1890. Deceased was born in Mono county, Cal., Jan. 1850, being 10 years, 7 months and 13 days old.

Since my last this neighborhood came very near having a destructive fire. About midnight a burning sawdust pile at H. C. Lewis' sawmill branched out and ignited a pile of stove wood near the cut-off saw and from thence to the main building. A young man named Berry (uncertain name) reaching to the roof, saved the alarm and raised the mill hands and the family in a big hurry by breaking in the door of Mr. Lewis' bedroom. The fire was extinguished by Mr. Lewis' fire hose, who was there visiting, out of her wit.
