CAUGHT WITH A KODAK.

Washington, Jan. 22.—I bought a kodak last week, and, like any other boy with a new toy, started out bright and early to see what I could do with it. On my way down Connecticut avenue I passed Sir Julian Pauncefote and a pair of his pretty daughters on their morning walk. The Pauncefotes are great pedestrians, and they were big, thick soled, broad heeled shoes Sir Julian is one of the nicest men that ever represented a foreign government at this capital.

Just to show you how accommodating he is—and to be an aristocratic Englishman too—I will mention an incident of which I have personal knowledge. Calling on him one day for some information about certain matters in England, I found him unable to accommodate me because of lack of familiarity with the subject.

But I'll tell you what I'll do," said Sir Julian: "I have some friends in England who know all about this matter, and I'll write three or four of them for information. Call on them for me, and they will be glad to help you. CONJUNCTION ON REFORM.

The Illinois Congressmen Give His Views of the Tariff Reform Outlook—The New Congress Will Keep the Question Open, Republicans in a Dilemma.

Hon. William M. Springer, of Illinois, while in New York not long ago talked with a member of the Reform club on the prospects of tariff reform. He spoke in the most confident manner of the outlook, and he felt the utmost confidence that the Democrats would win on the tariff issue in 1922.

The Republican politicians of Washington are now endeavoring to divert public attention from the principal issue upon which they were repudiated at the November election. They seem to be of the opinion that there is but one way open through which success is possible in 1922.

Upon the tariff question they have been thoroughly defeated. They now hope by reviving sectional issues through and by means of the Force bill and appeals to sectional prejudice to reform political issues upon other lines.

In this they were so much disappointed as they were overwhelmed by the result of the recent election. The people of the country have pronounced against taxation of the many for the benefit of the few. They will not give up this issue until it has eventuated in practical legislation in accordance with their demands.

If we were now living under the form of government which prevails in monarchial England, the new congress would be at once convened, and the McKinley bill would be repudiated immediately; but under our more conservative methods we must allow the constitutional form of government to be maintained.

On the tariff question the republicans can neither go forward nor backward with any prospect of bettering their condition. To stand still is conceded defeat; to move in the other direction offers scarcely less advantage. If they go forward they must rely upon the fulfillment of pledges made before the election and pending the passage of the McKinley bill, to the effect that while the tariff is being advanced, they will ultimately and in the near future, by means of competition, such prices would be sold cheaper than the McKinley bill.

It is difficult to speak along, and which makes the organs very sensitive to colds and changes in the weather. It is the result of speaking so much in the open air during the last campaign. About half the members of the house have been suffering from it, and many of us are not over it yet. And yet there does not appear to be any diminution of the quantity of congressional eloquence on account of the appearance of this new disease.

In the Capitol the industrious little kodak found many scenes meet and fit for its devoting, but the most of these shall be saved for a future letter. The kodak is no respecter of persons, and in good time it will have some interesting stories to tell of its espionage.

Competition has already done its perfect work in this country in the matter of reducing prices. So perfectly has competition been carried on that competition for the purpose of arresting the prices. In some cases this competition has taken the form of trusts or organized monopolies. These trusts have secured the concentration of nearly all the capital engaged in a given industry, and by this combination a complete control of the output and prices has been secured.

In other cases a miller type of combination has been resorted to. In some cases the combination has been secured by means of correspondence between the various interests and a tacit agreement reached as to output and prices after year after year. But through one form or another scarcely an industry can be managed in which further competition is not prevented or made impossible by the mutual concurrence of those engaged in the business.

Those, therefore, who look to competition for a reduction of prices will be deceived. Prices of manufactured articles can only be reduced, while the McKinley bill is in force, by the reduction of wages or by the adoption of improved machinery, or by the reduction of the tariff; it is entirely independent of it. In most lines of industry it would seem that the processes of manufacture were almost perfect at this time; but we may hope for continued improvement in this direction, although such improvement will scarcely be perceptible in the brief space of two years.

Lower prices secured by reduction of wages would be attended with greater disaster than if present prices should be maintained and wages increased. So that wherever cheapness is secured by reduction of wages, the remedy will be worse than the disease.

It is not a little interesting to find that the interests of the Republican party. Hence it seems conclusive that the Republican party cannot improve its position on the tariff or on taxation by adhering to the McKinley bill.

SUNDAY DRESS PARADE.

New York, Jan. 22.—If the angels can really look down from above what a curious sight they must see! For they behold not alone the outward adorning, but the inner furnishing of the hearts of the men and women who make up the moving throng.

Fifth avenue, New York, on Sunday, after the various congregations are dismissed, is a moving panorama of good clothes and restless eyes. There are two lines of pedestrians—one moving up, the other down. One line starts somewhere in the vicinity of Central park, and rolls downward like a resistless tide; the other begins in the region of Madison square, and unlike ordinary streams, gathers volume as it goes up hill. Little rivulets of people trickle into the main current from all of the side streets, and still themselves in the moving mass.

Just along slowly down the street, take the outside of the walk, for New Yorkers always turn to the right, and we will not jostle or be jostled.

Do you see that little woman in black? She wears widow's weeds. Demure looking, isn't she? Doesn't look as though she earned every dollar that supports herself and four little ones by sewing, does she? But it is true; and she comes out every Sabbath day, not altogether for the sake of going to church, or she looks that way, although she hopes she is a Christian, but to see that people are wearing, and to get the prevailing styles. I know she has her prayer book, and an well aware that she is not mourning, but I think her sin is not to be accounted grievous on the great day of reckoning. She cannot spare the time for church except occasionally, because this is the only day she has for her children. She rises early, she has breakfast for her husband, and while they are gone she puts her house in order. It is her only day, you know. After luncheon she takes each child to her room for an hour and exchanges confidences with it, leaves all of its little troubles and perplexities, and reviews the week with it. She finds out if its unduly and work day lessons learned, and what it talks with, what it says and does. When she has tucked the last of the children in for Sabbath school, she sits down to her sewing, and while they are gone she puts her house in order. It is her only day, you know.
