"German Syrup"

Asthma.

"I have been a great sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommended me to try this valuable medicine, Syrup, I am confident it saved my life. Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform those who are afflicted—that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to Boschee's German Syrup. C. B. STICKNEY, Pictou, Ontario."

FOUGHT TO A "PRAZZLE."

Starting Record of Orr's South Carolina Rifle Regiment.

N. T. F. Orr's South Carolina Rifle Regiment.

country they use a local term to designate the frayed edges of a worn-down remnant of anything, as: "ragged extremities," "ragged trousers," "ragged knees." It describes those battered and ragged remnants of their once proud battalions and regiments.

Orr's Rifles, of South Carolina, was a "prazle" on that historic Sunday of April, 1862, and it acquired its distinguishing name by hard fighting. It had more officers and men killed and died of battle wounds than did any other Union infantry regiment in the war. It lost more men on a single day than any other Confederate regiment so far as the official records show, and doubtless had the ghastly honor of outstripping all the regiments in the war in the famous South Carolina brigade led by Gen. Gregg and McGowan, a command that surpassed all others in the Confederacy at service in the number of its killed and wounded, and Orr's Rifles stands at the head of the fire regiments in the brigade in point of casualties.

Orr's Rifles owed its name as well as its organization to the Hon. J. L. Orr, a man who during a long career in the law for the war opposed secession with all the vigor he could command. When at last South Carolina seceded, he resigned his office, and returned to the Rifles and led them to the field. He was elected to the Confederate senate, however, and resigned his office to take part in the war.

After the war he became a Republican and was a delegate to the national convention that nominated Grant in 1868. The regiment bore the name of Orr's Rifles.

At the opening of the campaign on the Virginia peninsula in 1862 the Rifles were brigaded with four other South Carolina regiments under Gen. Maxey Gregg. The first important fight of the brigade was at Gaines Mill, June 27, 1862, where the Rifles, commanded by Gen. G. K. Warren's plucky little brigade, composed of the Fifth and Tenth New York Zouaves. It was a desperate fight on our side, and the Confederates had to advance to the attack against infantry and artillery well posted. At the point assailed by Gregg there was no open field except a narrow one supported by the New York Zouaves, and finding the fire too bitter for his men he ordered the Rifles to charge the guns alone. The Rifles advanced with gallantry and the Fifth (Durrys) made a countercharge, sending the Confederates back to the shelter of the woods with the fatal loss of 23 killed outright and 234 wounded.

The next severe battle of the Rifles was at Seven Pines, June 30, 1862, where with Hill's division, of Stonewall Jackson's command, they lay behind the famous railroad cut. Here the fighting was also hard to hand, our men being up to their muzzles of the muskets of the enemy to be received on their bayonets. The Rifles lost 19 killed, including one lieutenant and 150 wounded. The Rifles were in with about 250 men.

In the Maryland campaign the Rifles took hard knocks with the rest of Hill's division, but came off lucky in losses. They participated in the bloodless victory at Harper's Ferry, Sept. 14, and were in the best of things in the corridor at Antietam on the 17th.

The next severe battle of the Rifles was at Fredericksburg, in December, 1862, the battles on the banks of the James against Hancock at Deep Bottom in August and October, sometimes not mentioned in the war record. Finally, in the lead of a disastrous affair at Gettysburg on April 2, 1863, when the Rifles were overwhelmed and 115 of the Rifles were killed or wounded. The Rifles were in the lead of the brigade and were the first to be cut down by bullets, fell among the Confederates. McGowan's men suffered a heavy loss, 124 killed and wounded, with 194 missing, many of them killed or wounded. The Rifles lost 15 killed and 36 wounded, with 44 taken prisoners.

The regiment went forward to Cold Harbor, to the defense of Petersburg in June, the battles on the banks of the James against Hancock at Deep Bottom in August and October, sometimes not mentioned in the war record.
