EXECUTION AT FORT KLAMATH.

An interesting article on the hanging of the four Modoc warriors in 1873.

Klamath Falls Republican.

Appropos of the proposed demolition of the old historic post of Fort Klamath by the sale of the remaining buildings at the reservation, on July 2nd next, so the few vestiges of this frontier post so well known during the Snake and Modoc Indian wars, save the historic Capt. John and his associates in the peace commission massacre, will remain, we are able to present before a report of the execution of the four Modocs, which occurred on October 3, 1873, and was the closing act in the sanguine drama of the Modoc war.

The report was written by Capt. J. O. Applegate, as war correspondent of the New York Times, and also furnished the correspondent of the Oregonian and Pittsburg Leader. We also have an article giving the speeches of the condemned Modocs, delivered in the guard house on the day following their capture, and the account of the final departure of the subdued band for the Indian Territory, which we will publish later.

Fort Klamath, Oct. 3, 1873.

The day having arrived for the execution of the four Modoc prisoners, there was much stir in the garrison from early dawn.

Already the gallows had been erected on the reservation, and within three or four hundred paces of the stockade, where the majority of the Modocs are confined. The six ropes leading from the gallows to the gallows, the long coffins were placed upon the ground beneath, and the graves were already dug.

Many citizens of the adjacent country, and even from remote parts of the land, had congregated in and about the garrison to witness the execution.

As the eventful hour approached, officers of the garrison, and the various companies of troops, marched and counter-marched on the level and bare ground, and the bright accoutrements glittering among the pine trees, and Klamath and Modoc Indians from the reservation came seeking the eyes of the executioner.

At 9 o'clock, a. m. the condemned prisoners were taken to the guard house, placed in a wagon and escorted by troops to the gallows.

Upon their arrival near the engine of death, the prisoners were taken to the gallows, and the general and other officers bade them adieu.

Black Jim was silent and apparently unconcerned, while Boston Charley and Sore-Face Charley, who were to be executed last, were in a state of great excitement.

General Wheaton, who was in command of the garrison, and the various companies of troops, were present to witness the execution.

At 10 o'clock, a. m. the condemned prisoners were taken to the gallows, and the executioner raised his axe to the block.

The first blow fell on the neck of Sore-Face Charley, who fell to the ground, and the executioner raised his axe to the block.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

ABSOLUTELY PURE

John, Black Jim and Boston Charley were lashed into eternity. Captain Jack and Black Jim died instantly, their necks being broken, but Schon-chin John and Boston Charley struggled for some time.

The little form of Boston moved convulsively several times, and twice the knees were drawn up. The muscular frame of Schon-chin was longer in convulsions, the knees being drawn up repeatedly.

Finally the left hand was clenched and raised, and the right hand was clenched and raised, and the right hand was clenched and raised.

At the expiration of thirty minutes the Modocs were dead, and the four bodies, and finding life extinct, they were cut down and carried by soldiers to the reservation, where they were prepared for burial.

And then the citizens took their departure, the troops moved back to their quarters, and the reservation Indian marched by the garrison, and the marching of the Modoc warriors.

Amos, who was in the garrison, was Old Schon-chin, of Yainax, legal and hereditary chief of all the Modocs. He had quietly set within a hundred feet of the scaffold, and he was the brother of his only brother.

Although he carried on a vigorous war with the whites 20 years ago, since the Klamath and Modoc wars of 1847 and 1848, he has remained faithful to his obligations, and has zealously advocated the white man's law.

Repeatedly he visited the succeeding band in the Modoc country and counseled Captain Jack and Schon-chin John to return to the reservation with their people, but without avail.

By request of General Canby, he was at the first meeting held with the Modocs at the level and bare ground, and he returned to General Canby's tent, Schon-chin, in the presence of our correspondent, told the general that having seen the eyes of the executioner and his brother, and heard them talk, he knew they would never consent to leave the reservation unless they were taken to the reservation.

He then asked me to go with him, which being sanctioned, the general took the old chief's hand, thanked him for his assistance, encouraged him in his loyalty, and the following morning he left for Yainax, satisfied that the commission could accomplish nothing.

A last farewell to the execution of the old chief of General Wheaton's quarters, where, taking the general's hand, Schon-chin spoke substantially as follows:

"Today I have seen my only brother die, and I have seen the general's Spirit send quietly to all good men—but the hard death of the broken law."

"I had but one brother, but one mother, and I have seen him die, and I have seen his mother die."

"Many, many times have I gone into the Modoc country to talk to him, and try to persuade him to return to the reservation, and he would not take my advice. You know I have never broken the law, and I tell you that I will never give up my land."

"I will give up my land, and I will take the children of my brother and be a father to them. I hope you will let me have them, that I may take them to my mother, and take good care of them. I will teach them that the white man's law is good."

General Wheaton assured Schon-chin that he would represent the matter to the head of his department, and ask that the four children be placed in his care. He then returned to the garrison, and the four children were taken to the reservation.

Save My Child!

is the cry of many an agonized mother whose little one writes in croup or whooping cough.

In such cases, Dr. Acker's English Remedy proves a blessing and a godsend.

Mrs. M. A. Burke, of 309 E. 10th St., New York, writes: "Dr. Acker's English Remedy cured my baby of bronchitis, and also gave instant relief in a severe case of croup."

It is equally efficient for itching piles, and a favorite remedy for sore nipples, chapped hands, chilblains, frost bites, and chronic sore eyes.
