THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

Americas Great Day Fittingly Ob seryed-A Street Pageant. Ashland was a scene of fun, festivity and atriotic demonstration last Saturday, the the United States: A great crowd assembled to participate in the celebration. The people came from all about southern Oregon and northern California sent a large gon and northern California sent a large contingent of her patriotic sons and daughters. Eearly Saturday morning the roads leading into the city were lined with vehicles laden with families in which youths and maidens predominated, as they died in the wall of humanity which had been already assembled on the atreets. already assembled on the streets. They were all dressed out in their best and brightest gowns of cool spotless white, refreshing summer colors set off with a pro-fusion of red, white and blue ribbons, badges and regalia, with jaunty hats and caps, each appropriate to age and sex. Then there was the sturdy pioneer bent with years whose early recollections of the simple isolated lite of the first settlers of Oregon made a wonderful contrast to this glamour of display, pomp and parade presented to his view in the granite city that had risen om the old stage station and the flour mill. There too were many of the grizzled warriors of the "sixties" in whom the spirit and reminiscence of battie, camp and parade were stirred by the martial features of the day, All Ashland was there, every-body was there from all accessible points o do honor to the occasion and make acknowledgement of The grit and grandeur of the men who
