Cold Weather

Though the disagreeable effects of Catarrh are felt all the year round, cold and disagreeable weather aggravates the disease and it is during the winter season that its severest form is felt. Each succeeding year seems to intensify the disease, so that it gradually fastens its hold upon the sufferer with a grasp that becomes firmer each season.

Catarrh often appears as only a cold at first, and is hardly noticed. But gradually the cold returns, and it is more difficult to cure, and stays longer than formerly. These symptoms cannot be mistaken; they mark the first appearance of a disease that will develop in severity and stubbornness, and which it is impossible to cure with the local treatment of sprays, washes, and similar applications. Being a disease of the blood, only a blood remedy can have the slightest effect. succeeding year seems to intensify the disease, so that it gradually fastens its hold upon the sufferer with a grasp that

This season.

There is a fashion in musical instruments so far as the English young womas sudden and sweeping as those which take place in regard to the same young women's bonnets and hats. Of cours all of them who have pretensions to be-"musical" reckon among their accom-plishments the ability to play the piano, and they do not disdain to devote the surplus of their musical ability to instruments of a more portable kind mandolin, then, taking a flight upward, the violin itself was degraded into the position of a "fashionable" instrument, dividing its claims with the violoncello. We are said to be now on the eye of another change. According to Music, the instrument which is to be in vogue this winter is the Irish harp, which many young women belonging to the very smartest society are said to be already industriously practicing. It is not the large and rather unwieldy thing we are wont to see in the street orches tras, but a beautifully finished and dec orated little instrument, some 30 inch banjo. It is, in fact, the article which the minstrel boy slung behind him when, with his father's sword girder on, he set forth on that bellicose expe The tone of the Irish harp is said to be particularly sweet, though a little thin.

night, she found the child pressing her doll to her bosom and gazing at it with unutterable affection. As she stooped over the bed Bessie looked up and asked, earnestly: "Mamma, ain't God's baby got any dolly?"
"No," replied the mother, smiling. Bessie looked at her doll again and lugged it. Then conflicting emotions showed themselves on the little face. After a long silence the child raised her eyes, which had such an expression at those of the martyrs must have worn at the stake, and said, firmly: "Take it to Him, mamma."

Closing her eyes tight Bessie laid the doll in her mother's hands and buried her face in the pillow to try to forget the great sacrifice she had made.

Another wood worthy of note is the white oak. Like all the native woods, its grain is exceptionally handsome, tak-ing all sorts of curs and waves, and its irregular lines strongly defined, pro-ducing a fine effect when polished. Trees that have attained a great age are notably rich in marking, as was found in the Bryant oak, an immense tree on the poet's estate at Rosiyn, which a few years ago was undermined by springs at its root.

The tree was stored away to season and preserved for the family's use, to be made into furniture. On learning that it had been a landmark for over a century and a favorite with many old residents, Miss Julia Bryant presented one of the long arms to an old friend and neighbor, who had the word con-verted into small articles for library use, such as paper knives, penholders and inkatands. These were sold at fairs for the benefit of the Home for Friendless Children, a county institution that Mr. Bryant had been greatly interested in. A wood not'as well known or apprec ated by shipwrights as it should be is the Long Island chestnut. It has proved more durable than white oak. The old cloop Idlewild, built over 30 years ago and always in commission, is timbered entirely with chestnut, and not an inch i this wood has needed attention. Long Island is also noted for its yel-low locust and black walnut, and there is none finer in any part of the country than those found on the north shore. TEXAS RANGERS.

They Give Short Shift to the Wisk People.
There are at present about 200 rangers in Texas. They are soparated into com-panies and are kept on the borders for the most part, says the St. Leuis Glabe-Democrat. They live in the open air the year round. Nearly every night in the year, rain or shine, they have only the sky for a roof and the bare ground for a bed. Their pillows are their sad-dles. They are made up of the flower of Texas mannood. A wild, yelling, ours-ing cowboy is looked upon with can-tempt by them. They depend upon their six-shooters and carbines, their coolness and marksmanship, the known courage of their comrades. The gev-ernor of Texas is the chief efficer of the reasons. the rangers. What he says is law to them. The sheriff, the police, the militia, must not stand in their way if the rangers have orders from the gavernor. The rangers hold individually ernor. The rangers hold individually as much power as any sheriff in Texas. They hold more. They are not bounded by county lines.

Whenever a sheriff is unable to cape with lawleeness he calls on the governor and the rangers are sent to take charge. The section which the rangers police is larger in area than all of New England, and it is of such a character that were it not for their work it would be given over to lawlessness and disthat were it not for their work it would be given over to lawlessness and dis-order. They are paid $40 a menth and their rations and arms and ammunition are furnished by the state. They pro-vide their own horses, the state paying for them if they are killed.
