A COLD RECEPTION.

Ashland Gives the Oregon Press Association the Marble Heart and Klondike Glare.—A Discreditable Affair.

The Oregon Press Association at their meeting in Astoria last year voted to hold their annual meeting in Ashland Sept. 19 and 20, 1900. The people of Ashland who assume to be its representative citizens at all times when their vanity or selfish interest prompts them to make a move were as utterly unconcerned and as cold-blooded and dumb as a bivalve toward the event. The result was that only about 35 members arrived in their Pullman car from Salem on yesterday noon's train. No arrangements whatever were made by Ashland toward meeting them; they cared for themselves at the hotels. In the afternoon a few modest citizens out of humiliation for the town took several of them about the city and to the baths. The members of the Association closed up their annual business by 9 o'clock p. m. and retired to their Pullman car, which was attached to last night's north bound passenger train and they went northward to their homes.

There has never been anything so wanting in the courtesies and decencies of life yet exhibited toward an organization of self-respecting citizens of a state as was Ashland's treatment of the Oregon Press Association, save perhaps the dirty trick that Roseburg hotel men played upon the committee of Oregon people who brought the National Editorial Association to Oregon last year. This city has began to acquire a reputation in the line of being civil, courteous and decent toward visiting delegations of all kinds, the handsome reception to the M. E. Conference being especially in view. The splendid reception that Ashland gave the National Editorial Association last year resulted in writing up the town from the brilliant pens of scores of brainy writers from all points of the United States as it never was written up in all time before and could never be done for hire, the pen pictures of which will live long in its literature as adorning gems of local interest. The result of this extensive advertising has brought at least from 50 to 100 families to the town.

In the face of being the beneficiaries of all the kind remarks and appreciations so unstintingly showered upon this people by the National Editorial Association this community has allowed itself to lapse into such stagnation of swinish selfishness as to treat its benefactors—the Oregon Press Association which brought them here—in about as small and mean a manner as it is possible to do. Whether the town is so steeped in the cold-bloodedness of the chase after dimes, nickels and pennies as to be dead both to appreciation of past favors or to a sense of shame in its usage of the state editors this week, we are unable to divine. That it will do the community no good in the estimation of all people possessed of good feeling and moved by decent impulses, there is hardly room to doubt.

The following ladies and gentlemen were here:

Albert Tozier, Secretary, Portland; Col. J. S. Stewart, president, Journal, Fossil; D. M. C. Gault and wife, Independent, Hillsboro; Miss Laura E. R. Tozer on High street and will build a fine new residence. James Dutton, a contractor, came with him to construct the building.

THE METHODISTS ARE IN TOWN.

The 48th Annual Conference of the Oregon M. E. Church Cordially Welcomed to the Granite City.

The members of the Oregon M. E. Church conference flocked to town in large bodies Monday and Tuesday, the noon train on the latter day bringing Bishop Andrews and the largest number of them. The citizens of the town were at the trains with carriages and each person assigned to the respective home was promptly taken hold of and given a cordial reception by the host. The work of satisfactorily assigning such a large body of strangers is no easy task and the resident pastor, Rev. J. T. Abbett, is to be congratulated upon the thorough, systematic and happy manner in which he planned and completed the first important duty to the visiting strangers.

Tuesday evening the large M. E. Church building was crowded to listen to the formal reception of the Conference. It opened with prayer by Rev. S. E. Meminger. Presiding Elder D. T. Summerville of the Ashland district presided and in announcing the program of the evening gave this city a handsome turn, indicating that this place above any other town in Oregon, enjoyed a reputation along the lines that meet the approbation of a Methodist's conception of what is the proper thing. Especially was this the case on the moral issues and standards of the day and this town's firm stand on the temperance question.

Prof. C. A. Hitchcock presented the educational features of this city which has always been the strong card of the town under all circumstances, the steady spirit of which was shown in a material way by the presentation to the state of the state Normal school building and property, the maintenance of the Chautauqua Assembly, the Ashland high school which has graduated over 100 students, the new east school building, and Ashland furnishing 20 odd students to the state and other coast universities, leading all other towns for attendance at Oregon state university.

Rev. F. G. Strange, of the Presbyterian church, on behalf of the other churches of the town welcomed the Conference in an original, unique and happy vein that indicated that diplomacy and tact were not lost arts in that profession.

Rev. J. T. Abbett, resident M. E. church pastor, made a few briet remarks of welcome, when Bishop Andrews of New York arose and responded to the various addresses of welcome. The venerable prelate is a polished gentleman in whose face the priestly character beams most beautifully. His response to the welcome was clothed in exquisitely beautiful English and its heartiness and sincerity placed the finishing touches upon a very pleasing and happy affair. The M. E. church choir sang several pieces during the various numbers, and Bishop Andrews dismissed the audience with a benediction.

WEDNESDAY.

The conference met at 8:30 a. m., Bishop Andrews presiding. The exercises began by singing hymn 316; Bishop Andrews reading Scripture lessons from 12th chapter of Exodus and the 6th chapter of John. All joined in singing "Just as I Am Without One Plea." The Bishop, assisted by the Presiding Elders and Rev. J. T. Abbett, the local pastor, administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The service was conducted by prayer by Bishop Andrews.

The following officers were elected: C. A. Lewis, secretary; G. Sykes, H. B. Elworthy and E. V. Smith, assistants; H. T. Atkinson, statistician; G. R. Arnold, E. F. Zimmerman, G. G. Haley and R. M. Corner, assistants; John Parsons, treasurer, and A. S. Mulligan, assistant.

The order of business submitted by Rev. Jenkins was adopted.

The standing committees were announced. The balance of the afternoon session was taken up in listening to the reports of the pastors of the various charges.

After a discussion of the matter of investigating the charges against Rev. S. A. Starr of Portland it was voted that the investigation be a secret one. The following committee was appointed and the investigation took place behind closed doors in the Baptist Church Bishop Andrews presiding: R. A. Adkins, M. O. Brink, C. E. Crandell, R. E. Dunlap, Edw. Gittens, W. B. Hollingshead, N. F. Jenkins, A. Kershaw, D. McLachlan, W. H. Meyers, H. Oberg, G. F. Round, S. A. Smith, S. Snyder, Joseph Mottershead.

Dr. I. D. Driver being ill was unable to come, and there was no lecture as intended.

In the evening a packed house presented itself. Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll of New York, whom President McKinley sent to Porto Rico, talked upon missionary work. He was introduced by Rev. Dr. E. R. Dille of Oakland, Cal., a 13-inch gun, who arrived in the afternoon.

The following ministers are here:

THE O. M.'S CONNECTIONS.

A Redding Paper Names The Burlington Route and Sends It Through Eastern Oregon, Down the Klamath River and to San Francisco.

Redding Free Press.]

The promoters of the new Oregon Midland Railway between Klamath Falls, Oregon, and a point on the main line near Hornbrook, Siskiyou county, give abundant evidence of their intention to build the road without delay.

All the larger mill firms of Northern California and Southern Oregon have been invited to submit bids on quantities of ties which they can turn out with expedition. Coggins Brothers, for instance, have been asked an estimate on 70,000 ties to be furnished in the near future.

The most important development of this railroad building, however, is evidence to indicate that the Oregon Midland which will traverse a rich timber section of Northern California will not fulfill its mission in marketing the milled products of the forests, but that it will eventually form merely one link in a railway chain reaching from Chicago to the Pacific with the terminal point at the magnificent port of Eureka.

The railroad company which it is believed is back of the Oregon Midland, and which desires an outlet at the Pacific ocean is the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the road that has for years turned longing eyes toward the West.

Recently the superintendent of construction of the Burlington slipped quietly into Siskiyou county and starting from a point along the line of the Oregon Midland made a trip overland nearly 200 miles to Eureka. The hard horse-back jaunt was not made for the purpose of pleasure.

The Burlington is the lessee of the Oregon Short Line. From a point in Malheur county where the line comes in from Idaho, surveyors have run a line across Harney, Lake and Klamath counties to Klamath Falls, the Northern terminus of the Oregon Midland. This survey reaches across the wonderfully fertile section of Southern Oregon where agricultural pursuits cannot be followed on a large scale because of the high expense of marketing the product. A railway will develop immense resources not easily estimated. From the Oregon line to Klamath Falls along the route mapped out is about 300 miles. The country is level and offers few obstacles.

Another circumstance, small but significant, is this: After the recent agreement between the railroad companies to abolish all commission offices, the Burlington maintained but three salaried offices in California and one of these is at Eureka.

The North Pacific line reaching from San Francisco to Ukiah is building out fifty miles in the timber belt. The two new Eureka companies, the Arcata and Mad River and the Eureka and Eel River company have consolidated and are building a road to reach north from Eureka to Blue Lake and south of Eureka for forty miles. The gap on the south could soon be filled by an extension to the North Pacific line, giving a through line to San Francisco. The line built across from the Oregon Midland, toward Eureka could connect with the Arcata and Mad River line at Blue Lake.
