MERRY KATIE EMMETT. The Famous Soubrette at Opera

House, Saturday. Mr. Lorin J. Howard will present his star, Merry Katie Emmett, at the opera

largest theatres of the country. The Washington (D. C.) Post, says: There are many lovers of good melodrama in this city, and last night a house full of them gathered at the Academy to | Services at Baptist church as follows: greet Katie Emmett in 'The New Waifs of Sunday school at 9:45 a. m., Preaching New York.' It is one of the pieces where at 11, B. Y. P. U. society at 6:30 p. m., consistently and diabolically villainous, and the heroine is always sweet. The prevalence of slang and high flown sentiment is built for one portion of the house and yet so well built that such plays are generally fortune winners. The climaxes of 'The New Waifs of New York,' are constructed to an excessive height, and then terminate in a roar that reaches the last bench in the gallery. The house applauded wildly last night, and those who had seen the play before in its those who had seen the play before in its highest praise. The setting all bore the marks of newness, and the mechanical and Crowell got mixed up in some very details were well carried out. The crossing of two trains over the Elevated R. bridge was well executed, and the fire the city limits so as to bring him in. in the last act was really done that one could pardon the fact that it came after the real finish of the play.
