You forget your proper position, and have crossed my will in several ways." Mr. Redbolt colored rather painfully, and his principal continued, with a smile of spiteful triumph: "You understand what I allude to?" The clerk bowed slightly.

in a perfectly even, matter-of-fact "Eh, yes," said Mr. Dewhurst. "But I won't ask you to continue your work

With that he pushed across the table a little pile of coins, which had been counted out already, clearly showing that he intended from the first to make use of the opportunity. For the first time Joe Redbolt looked angry. It was adding insult to injury to send him away adrift at a moment's notice, as if he had disgraced himself. It was the more outrageous because he was a distant connection of the Dewhursts by blood. The two young men had been for a short time at school together. They had entered the firm together, and Redbolt had worked his way up by sheer ability, under old Mr. Dewhurst's eye, to a responsible position. Naturally, they knew the same people, and to some extent visited the same houses, and it was in this way that Dewhurst's inherent jealousy had ripened into positive rancor-for that there was a member of the fair sex at the bottom of it is almost obvious. The innocent cause of the trouble, little dreaming of the mischief she was creating, had thoroughly enjoyed the rivalry of the two men, as every THE WEEKLY CHRONICLE, the brightest and most complete Weekly Newspaper in the world, prints regularly 84 columns, or twelve she had not made it quite clear which pages, of News, Literature and General Information: also a magnificent Agricultural Department certainly a woman's privilege.

house, and-then suddenly he remembered. Only two nights before he had attended drill at the headquarters of his volunteer corps. The men had been asked which of them wished to join the C. I. V. for the front. He thought of the glow that had burnt through his veins, how he had longed to offer himself, and had only been prevented by his feeling of obligation to his old friend's business. Now he was free!

That settled it. Old England was in need of help from men such as he He was as sound as a bell in wind and limb; he had done his turn at volunteering and could shoot more than a little. Within half an hour his name was entered as one of those who were ready for service at the front, and he was ordered to go before the doctor. That gentleman laughed at him. "If we get 1,400 men as fit as you are," he said, "we shall do well!"

Having successfully passed all the tests, and been duly enrolled as one of the city of London imperial volunteer corps, he felt slightly easier in his mind.

At last the final moment came. He had attended the service at St. Paul and sung the national anthem until he was hoarse. He had been slapped on the back by hundreds of warmhearted but heavy-burdened citizens. He had even fought his way successfully through a mob of enthusiastic patriots all the way from Bunhill Row to Nine Elms, where he was one of the first to arrive.

There stood the train waiting to take them to Southampton. There, too, stood the long-suffering band, and khaki." Then their eyes met, and in a minute he was clasping in his arms the girl who had refused him a month before and in whose presence he had always been so shy that he had never dared to press her hand.

How had it happened? There seemed no need-and certainly no time-for explanations. Why had he accepted her foolish "No" when she never meant him to? She always thought he would speak to her again. Why had he been so awkward and brusque in the way he had asked her? He had given her no chance to say "Yes." And it was only last night she had learned what had happened - from Dewhurst's own lips—and she had cried all night at the mischief she had done, and would he forgive her? And did he care for her a little bit?

"Take your seats, there," roared an It was not the time for mock modesty. With her arms round his neck and tear-stained cheeks pressed to his, she promised to wait for him. "God bless you!" he whispered.

"And God bring you back to me!" she answered. And then, with cheers and whistles, and the band playing "God Save the Queen," and men shouting and laughing and crying, the train moved out, Chicago-and the City's Own were en route Portland Worth, Cmaha, Kanand the City's Own were en route White.
