Last week Will J. Sherlock brought into town the head with horns attached. of a huge mountain sheep, which Richard Sherlock killed during the Modoc war. Mr. Richard Sherlock states that during the last summer of the Indian war, known as the Modoc war, he was forced, for his safety, into a cliff of rocks where he remained in hiding for some a mammoth mountain sheep, and as such animals were plentiful those times such animals were plentiful those times he paid no particular attention to the size of the sheep, caring more for his escape from the red-skins at that time than anything else. He lost the place and has never been able to find the exact spot, though he has hunted many times since for the bones of the large animal A few days ago Jack Pullen, who works for Mr. Sherlock, was looking for sheep he got. time, and while there he shot and killed Sherlock, was locking for sheep he got into a very rocky place, and while huntinto a very rocky place, and while hunting his way out ran onto the horns and because of bones of a mountain sheep and carried the head to camp. Mr. Sherlock was certain that it was the one he had killed years ago, when he was told where it was found and the place described. Will Sherlock brought the curio to town last week and will mount it and keep it as a relic of olden times. The horns each, measure from base to the tip 35 inches, and are 151/2 inches in circumference at the base. They stand 34 inches apart at the point
