Redding Searchlight. One of the secrets of nature which science has not yet been able to dis close is the source of petroleum deposites. Theories and opinions of the closest stud ents are numerous and varied. Some have assumed that petroleum is a secretion of a microscopical insect in the sand-stone formation; but, if so, the indust-rious little animal has thus far escaped letection. A later theory is that petroleum is decayed marine vegetation and is thus allied to coal. The Texas oil fields have been found to be resting on vast beds of sulphur, and inasmucl as most mineral oils have sulphur base it may be that this mineral is "the mother of oil," as quartz is popularly assumed to be the "mother of gold," Until we know more, however, about the genesis of petroleum than we do at present our knowledge of the duration of the genely must remain purely
