SATURDAY, JAN. 2, 1904.

The reputation of the Oregonian is now secure and has a stable valuation in the East. Senator Hoar refused to shake hands with Scott on account of a coarse article, which the Oregonian printed against Hoar's late colleague, Morrell. Last spring an Oregonian reporter got a humorous article out of an interview with a poor wretch under the death sentence. An editor who doctors his news columns in order to do a little political bushwhacking is liable to snubs, and the coarse articles that repeatedly appear in the Oregonian would bankrupt a paper in any other part of the country. Any country town feudist can secure the Oregonian to lambast the opposition. We don't know on what terms.

The Salem Sentinel thinks that Uncle Sam will have to take a change of venue from Judge Bellinger if it wants a conviction in any of the land fraud cases. Bellinger certainly does run a funny old court. Sometimes the judge lets the defense try the complaining witness until you can't tell which is the accused. Then again, the great institution of justice—the jury,—is a kind of a fifth wheel in that court. Judge Bellinger is very much a politician—too much to ever gain a reputation as a jurist.

Many residents of this section have been offered back the money which they paid the government when making proof on their timber claims. This is some newly invented plan of the interior department.

When Hitchcock refused to reinstate Thomson of La Grande or retain Booth, the Oregon delegation appealed to the President. That was a good move, as it is likely to disgust Roosevelt with the work of his subordinate.

There are some people who thoroughly dislike the truth. They should be made to like it.
