The man who does not take a newspaper was in town yesterday, having driven in from Wayback township.

Among the indications of his being behind the times, he was seen to set his watch by the sign hanging in front of Hardy's jewelry store, wiped his nose on a bolt of calico in front of the new cheap store, went into the tin shop to inquire the price of tobacco, called on Hackleman to find out the news and paid Miller two bits for an almanac.—Lebanon Express.

When we sit around our happy firesides in glorious Oregon and read the eastern papers, which are filled with fearful accounts of blizzards, cyclones and other damaging features to life and property, we should thank God that we are where we are. Just see how Oregon is blessed to-day. Where is there a state, a nation or an empire that can compete with us in climate and crops.—Lebanon Express.

The inventor of the basswood ham, the wooden nutmeg and the shoe-pep clove must yield the palm to canning to the Astoria man who had a set of false teeth made for his antiquated cow, and succeeded in selling her for infinitely more than she was worth, because she was worth nothing.—Pioneer.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

"For God and Home and Native Land."

(Mrs. F. A. Morris, Press Superintendent)

April 7th, the day on which our National Union, endorsed by the American Sabbath Union, wishes us to request pastors to preach on "Sabbath Observance."

April 28th, appointed as the world's day of prayer for the W. C. T. U., when a collection is to be taken for the World's W. C. T. U.

There was a good attendance at the Mother's meeting last Saturday and an interesting time is reported.

Pennsylvania and Nebraska have decided to submit amendments to their constitutions, prohibiting the sale, manufacture and importation of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, to a vote of the people. If all temperance reformers will unite in supporting the amendments, the probability of success will be large. Let Miss Francis E. Willard concentrate the force of the W. C. T. U. in Pennsylvania and Nebraska until after the elections. Let ministers of the gospel plead for the measure. Let all temperance orders and all organizations in which temperance is a plank, take up the agitation. Let it be conceded by all that no shade of partisan coloring shall rest on the measure, and that no small differences in opinion shall effect loyalty to it. Then the measure will go through. Pennsylvania and Nebraska have shown themselves in earnest about temperance reform, and if they secure the amendment it will be enforced.

One of the fairest and most convincing trials of prohibition yet made, has been in Cambridge, Mass. In May, $7, a no license law went into effect. The citizens determined it should be fairly tried. The mayor used his whole authority in enforcement. A bulletin published regularly all observations pro and con on the working of the measures. At the end of the year large numbers who had been but half-hearted supporters or opposers of no license voted enthusiastically for a continuance of the system. The saloons have been closed. Arrests for all offenses have diminished. Physicians report the homes improved, employers, better work done, landlords, more prompt payments of rents. It is said to be difficult even to give away old clothes.

This success is the citizen's success. Prohibition, or any other reform law will not enforce itself.

CHAUTAUQUAN.

An Appeal For Work Among the Chinese.

By much sacrifice and expense we send missionaries to foreign lands to teach the heathen the way of life and salvation, and in this we do well; but where is our consistency, if we neglect or are indifferent to the heathen at our doors? Shall we allow them to worship their idols before our eyes and manifest no interest, feel no responsibility in telling them of the loving Savior who died for them? The first step, when desiring to open a Chinese Sabbath or Mission School, is to attract the attention of the Chinamen by advertising. Obtain, if available, the assistance of a Chinaman who speaks English well and can read and write in Chinese. Get him to write out in his own language a number of notices of the opening of the school, naming the place, the hour of the day, the date of opening, giving an invitation to all Chinese who wish to obtain a knowledge of our language, to attend, emphasizing the fact that the school will be free of charge. Get him to paste these notices in every available public place where his countrymen congregate.

For a school-room, some ladies use their dining-rooms, some their back parlors, or if they have enough pupils, they rent a room and fit it up with benches, tables and lamps, and place over the door in Chinese and English, "Chinese Mission."

You will need to procure for yourself and scholars, Rev. J. M. Condit's book for beginners, with lessons in English and Chinese, and for advanced scholars, Rev. A. W. Loomis' book. An English and Chinese dictionary will materially assist in the work. If there is in the school one pupil who understands English and can read in Chinese, he can act as an interpreter, and will be a valuable assistant. Any kind of Primary Charts will be of great help in teaching words and short sentences, where a whole class can be taught at once. Charts with pictures to represent the words are most useful. Do not wait until all arrive before the teaching is commenced, but begin with the one or two who come first. It is difficult to have a formal opening, as they are very irregular in coming; but be prompt yourself and give the prompt pupils the benefit of early coming.

Always select a lady as superintendent of the school, one who is without prejudice towards the Chinese and has their temporal and spiritual welfare at heart. If possible, secure lady teachers to assist. One or two teachers who are enthusiastic and love the work and will pledge themselves to continue faithful, are much better than half a dozen half-hearted workers who cannot be depended on to teach regular.

A blackboard is of much service, to be used for writing words and sentences upon, and for giving "Chalk Talks." Let each pupil provide himself with a ruled note book, in which he can copy the words from the blackboard, or in which the teacher can set a copy and teach him to write. If charts with pictures to represent the words cannot be obtained, they can be taught by "Object Lessons," giving them the names of common objects around the room, names of articles of dress, etc. Show them fruits, vegetables and grains, then write the word for them to copy and learn.

You can only at first teach them name words over and over again, for if they do not understand our language, you can expect no other results.
