Editor has that a claim for $150,000 in the hands of a lawyer against the site of the nearly completed new Courthouse at Los Angeles, Cal. The claim alleges the property was deeded to the county for educational purposes, and it should be used for other purposes at any time it should revert to the original owner. Mrs. Bell is the grantor, and the heir is Mrs. Stoddard, wife of a member of the Southern Pacific.

The fire department of Seattle is torn with internal dissension, and some startling developments are promised in the investigation which is to be made. All the firemen are appointed by the Board of Fire Commissioners and the Mayor. In order to qualify, the firemen must have been residents of Seattle for a year prior to their appointment. It is claimed that most of the firemen appointed last November were not eligible, and the fight is being urged to oust them. The trouble is of long standing, and is believed to be the worst in the history of the old volunteer department and ex-members of the Chicago, St. Paul and other Eastern departments.

The German tramp steamer Amigo, which recently arrived in San Francisco from Avapulo, has been engaged in the transportation of Chinese from Moscow to Mexico. From what could be learned she is the first of the fleet of steamships that will be used in this trade. The Chinese taken to Mexico are put to work on the railroad there. They are paid at the rate of 50 cents a day, and their food consists of rice, beans and fish. They are virtually slaves, all of them signing contracts to work for from five to eight years. The Amigo on her last voyage carried over 500 Chinese, and is understood that various railroads in Mexico have contracted for between 20,000 and 25,000 of these slaves to be delivered within two years.

The cruiser San Francisco returned to the Mare Island yard the other evening from her trial trip. She looks well after her trial run outside. Members of the board of officers that went out to report the result of her trip and all the officers of the ship speak in the highest terms of praise regarding the sea-going qualities of the ship. The weather outside was rough, and served well to try her. She passed right along at a speed of eleven or twelve knots without shipping a "green sea." Some spray flew up on the bridge, but not enough to hardly wet the spar deck. The run was made as far down the coast as Point Sur, a few miles below Monterey. In slowing down and turning about the ship behaved splendidly. There is scarcely any pitch or roll to her, and at times the sea was running very high. No attempt was made to speed her. In running the twelve-knot speed the engine appeared to make no extra effort. The run was made singly and broadside and whether fired singly or the broadside the ship did not appear to feel any effect from the concussion, and no strain was manifest on her. In firing broadside guns it is reported that four of the vertical shields were slightly cracked and a couple of lugs on two of the gun carriages were broken off. This will necessitate their repair. The guns and shields that were placed on board from the Charleston worked well and suffered no accident from being fired. The shields that were cracked are the ones recently sent out from the East for the San Francisco. There must have been some defect in the metal. The lugs broken appear not to have been made heavy enough to withstand the shock of the recoil.

THE AMERICAN EAGLE.

Indian Methods of Capturing the Noble "Bird of Freedom"—An Eagle Trap.

The method of capturing the bird among the Absaraki and Blackfoot of the northwest is exceedingly novel and most ingenious as well as curious. In fact, there are two styles of hunting eagles. The first thing of all is, of course, to hold an eagle dance. An Indian cannot do anything without first dancing for it, and as an eagle is an exceedingly hard and difficult bird to capture, the dance in consequence must be all the harder and more protracted. As a rule the nomads of the northwest still cling to the antiquated, antedated bow and arrow, and as their quarry soars high among the mountain peaks, forever on the watch and keeping away from danger, it is a very difficult matter indeed, even with a fine sighted rifle and a quick trigger, to bring down one of these high flying birds. Yet the Crow captures them almost easily with their simple arrows, where a white man, armed with the best of modern breech loaders, would fail to score nine times out of ten. Crawling carefully to the snake among the rocks, an Indian will work his way high above the eryies, when it is a very easy matter to send an arrow flying downward, and usually with skillful results.

The second method practiced by the Absaraki tribe to secure the much coveted bird is to build an eagle trap. The brave who is after plunder goes off alone by himself to the Big Horn mountains, proceeds upward until he arrives in the perpetual snow district, and selecting a favorable spot digs a pit large enough to snugly conceal his person within. After a vast deal of careful preparation (one item of which is to carry the loose earth away in a blanket and cast it to the wind), the still hunter arranges a covering for his trap, consisting of light reeds and grasses, and then proceeds to ensconce himself in the pit. The bait is a slice of tough meat, bear or mountain goat, firmly attached with sinews to a piece of raw hide, and this is laid on the trap outside to await a customer. Just at dawn of the day, as the sun is coming up over the eastern peaks, the eagles, who all night long have smelt the savory morsel, swoop viciously down upon the rawhide and bear meat, which they proceed vigorously to tear with their talons and beaks. Meanwhile, the buck inside, watching his opportunity, reaches up through an interstice in the trap, and seizing the big fellow firmly by one of his legs, quick as wink drags the surprised bird of liberty down into the prison below.

The fun would not now be all on one side either had the eagle even a flash of the second to recover himself in, but the Indian, the moment his victim's neck is within reach, with one sharp, quick, wicked swipe of his long, keen hunting knife, severs that member from the body, and so the matter ends. The warrior then returns to his lodge, and proceeds to relate to his friends and relations the wonderful exploits of his trip, of which he is the sole hero and his high-muckamuck.—Fort Keogh (M. T.) Globe-Democrat.

Content to Be Superficial. We are all too generally content to be superficial—say, proud of it. It is difficult to be otherwise, as yet. The country is young. The national taste for the superficial is not yet broken. The general average of passengers upon the road is about 90,000 per day, but upon foggy days, when the ferries are obstructed, the figures sometimes reach 155,000. In other words, there are 155,000 over the Brooklyn bridge every day in the cars to populate
