FRIDAY, AUGUST 14, 1891.
Entered as second class matter at the post office at Newberg, Oregon.

PROF. JOSEPH SWAIN was in Portland last week conducting examinations for entrance to the Leland Stanford, Jr., university, of California, which will open October 1.

THE Athena Press says it wants to see the liquor dealers keep their place. If the brother's wish were granted no one on this earth would suffer inconvenience, however much his majesty with the horns and tail might be discommoded.

Fruits and flowers for August comes up to the standard. It is without exception one of the finest horticultural papers in the country, and being practically a home paper (Portland) it should have a place on the table of every Oregon fruit grower.

A RECENT Kansas crop report is sent out from New York. We knew that those eastern fellows had a first mortgage on most Kansas farms and on some of the growing crops, but this is the first intimation that they have any kind of a lein on Kansas news.

We understand that Newberg is to be illustrated in the World very soon. We are pleased to think that when a cut of the college building appears it will not be eclipsed by the picture of a brewery or a saloon. The principal reason for this is that there are no such places in the town.

THERE are cranks and cranks, but the crankiest of all is one W. R. Vaughan of Council Bluffs, who has gone east with the avowed intention to set measures on foot which shall give to the ex-slaves $400,000,000. Some wily politician will probably appropriate some one else's funds and buy Vaughan off for $400 or $500, and nothing more will be heard of it.

THE employees of the Oregon Pacific railroad have not received any pay for the past six months, and have become dissatisfied with the company's way of doing business. They don't think for a minute of striking, but they have asked for an order from the court to apply the earnings of the road to the payment of the men.

THOSE discontented G. A. R. members at the national encampment who wanted to throw overboard the colored members in the south, were very unceremoniously squelched. The prevalent opinion was that if the colored men were worth fighting for, and in many instances fighting side by side with, twenty-five and thirty years ago, it is poor policy to go back on them now.

THE GREAT shoe factory that was established at Sunnyside a suburb of East Portland with such a flourish of trumpets has been turned into a tenement house. The factory was erected to boom real estate and its mission being filled it goes hence. This is the same old story, but suckers will continue to bite at other places under the same circumstances just the same.

A SEATTLE brute in the guise of a Catholic priest, was treated to a coat of tar and feathers one day last week. He is charged with immoral conduct toward young girls who attended the confessional, and this is said to be his second offense. Tar and feathers was a great deal too slight a token of esteem for the Seattle people to bestow upon him. If in the catalogue of crimes in the world today there is anything to be considered more heinous than the taking of life, this should rank first, and punishment in proportion should be meted out to the offender.

SOME politicians in this country are trying very hard to kill Blaine physically as well as politically. Almost every day some sort of a report is sent out announcing that the secretary's health is in a very uncertain condition, and no number of denials by Mr. Blaine's friends, or even Mr. Blaine himself, appear to put any kind of a check to the spread of the stories set afloat by these political comorants. On the other hand we see the democrats divided between Cleveland and Hill, both of whom stand ready to sacrifice the party in order to wreak personal vengeance on the other. This is American politics today, with little prospect of improvement in the near future.

ACCORDING to the Independent, Woodburn is in a fair way to get a saloon, the first in two years. The reason given is that there is a city revenue to be raised that is hard to get in any other way than by a saloon license. In the past two years without a saloon Woodburn has prospered, as will every other town similarly situated, other things being favorable. Around them the people of Woodburn may see any number of towns having saloons that have gone backward in this time. Again, the $700 revenue from the saloon will be more than offset by the ultimate expense it will prove to the taxpayers. Further, it will open the way for more saloons. We are glad to see the Independent opposing the proposed change, and trust that for the good of our neighbor, the scheme may be nipped in the bud.

The Capital Journal is casting about for some available senatorial timber, we judge. It wants to know if Oregon has a millionaire.

Owing to the low stage of water, navigation has been almost suspended and will remain so until the fall rains set in. The Three Sisters is the only one of the Oregon Pacific boats now on the river, and is only going as far up as Salem, to which place she is making regular trips. The Elwood has been withdrawn from the route as soon as the river rises. Capt. Wood with the Salem is yet making C. Tri-weekly trips to Dayton, with a good trade, and as his boat is of light draft for her size, he will probably not be compelled to tie up. The Oregon City transportation boats, Altona and Latona are making their regular trips on their schedule time, the construction of these boats being such that as long as there are heavy dows at night they can run. One of those days when Uncle Sam gets a move on himself and builds wing dams and dredges out the bars steamboats will run the year round on the Willamette and make as regular time as the railroad trains.—Oregon City Enterprise.

It would indeed be a great blessing to shippers up the river if Uncle Samuel would interest himself in the improvement of the upper Willamette so that boats could run at all seasons of the year, but our old uncle is "hard workin' and slow savin'," and the chances are that the state authorities will have to take the matter up if anything is done during the present decade. Don't forget in the meantime, however, that Newberg has a boat from Portland as regularly as the days come and go, for the snags and sand bars are all above our town.

BIG FIR TREES.
Reports are now coming in from almost every county in western Washington of some big trees discovered for the World's Fair. The most definite knowledge has been contributed by Mr. S. H. Soule and Mr. J. M. Saar, of Sumas City, who recently explored a forest of big trees. They measured fir trees from nine to fourteen feet in diameter, six feet from the roots, and these trees run from 200 to 400 feet in height. A perfect spruce was also found which measured fourteen feet in diameter. Specimens like these, with cedar trunks five feet square and 120 feet long, without a knot or blemish—these are what will be shown to attract the lumber makers to Washington, and to help establish markets in the east.—Aberdeen Herald.

Such trees as those mentioned above are the kind that in order to see the top a man must look the second time, and this is no fact either. Let a man from the east who is unaccustomed to seeing tall trees, stand near one of these monarchs of the forest and tell him to look at the top of the tree, and not one time in a hundred will he throw his head back far enough to bring the top within range of his vision without a second effort.

THE "LUCKY" FARMER.
"No, boys, it's no use talking; these agricultural papers are just too tony for us people. They ain't no good to us now. I used to take great stock in them when a boy, but all that nonsense was knocked out o' me years ago. Some folks that are rich enough to hire their work done may find time to read all this trash, but I can't, and what's more, can't see how they can afford to pay for it all."

"There is 'Squire Halford, over there; him and me began life together, you might say, and for all his reading he hain't learned the science of farming yet, but still has to keep pegging away at his paper as regular as it comes. I don't suppose he has missed reading a single number in years."

"Folks used to say my land was better than his, and it was then. But somehow, I always have had bad luck and my farm hasn't cultivated up so well as his. I never quite understood it and in the face of all his ditching, and general monkeying, too. It's hinky for him he can raise anything on his place after all his experiments, but instead of being contented and thankful for what he has got, here he is forever trying something new till one would think the place would be ruined. It is all mine can stand, without such experimenting, to raise all the crops I need."

"Some folks is born lucky and they can do anything, seems like, while the rest of us have to go steady and let experiments alone. 'Squire Halford is no better farmer than I be, if he has had better luck. That ain't my fault or his credit. My crops beat his blind the first few years Poor fellow! I was sorry for him them times and tried my best to help him along, but it wa'n't no use. Seems like, he got clean discouraged and, like so many others, tried to forget his trouble in bad habits; only he took to reading instead of to drink. Went and subscribed to a lot of agricultural papers right in the midst of his hard luck, and, what was worse, the very next spring he commenced to tear up his land like a mad bull—ditching, he called it. I tried my best, boys, to get him right again before he buried all he had in the ground, but it wa'n't no use. I guess Providence tried, too, for his crops were just as good as mine that year, if not a little better. But even success didn't bring him back to his senses, and the very next spring what does he do but peter away that much more on ditching, phosphates, improved machinery, and so on."

"Well, that being a wet season, most of us couldn't begin work till late. His land, not being so rich, dried off quicker and gave him a chance, though it's a blessed wonder he didn't lose that chance by killing his crops with his patent phosphates. But they came on in good shape in spite of his trunks and, other people's crops being late, on account of the delay, and drowned out mostly, things were way up in price, so he made a big haul, and might have gone right in then doing well if he had only let the agricultural papers alone, but he wouldn't. And the way he went into improved machinery used to make me sick almost, remembering as I did how we had groined up together and commenced life for ourselves side by side.

"Well, sir, the rain kept right on through harvest, that season, and most of us lost a good deal of what we did raise, but somehow Halford managed to rush his in during a little good weather we did have right at first before most of our crops were ready to go in anyway. I don't see just how the fellow managed to get through so quick, though, trying to run all that machinery, too, but after that first year or two, he always was a lucky fellow."

"He used to come over and lecture me by the hour on his modern methods and all that, even claiming his own success was due to them. Of course I knew better, for I saw then that my land wasn't cultivating up so well as his. It's all in the land and the luck."

"Yes, sir! I've had hard scratching and hard luck all my life. Just as sure as something needed doing at a certain time, something else would have to be done, and somehow every drowth, insect and lightning-rod swindle seems to have a special pick at me. Still, I have managed to get along very well. At least I never went quite crazy over these agricultural magazines. Let me give you a little advice, boys: If you want to be a farmer, don't pay any attention to them papers. Why, I picked one up the other day just out of curiosity and found it full of such truck as 'Improving the Stock,' 'Drainage,' 'Plant Food,' 'Chemistry of the Soil,' 'Commercial Fertilizers,' and all such stuff. As if a cow would not always be a cow in spite of your improved stock methods! The old ways are good enough for me."

"I must go now. I see the cows are in the oats. You see we couldn't patch up the fence just now, the brakes are so in the way. I don't see how 'Squire Halford finds time to keep things up so sleek as he does. But, then, he's rich and can hire his work done. Wonderful how lucky some people are, flying right in the face of Providence, too."—WILDER GRAMME, in Farm and Home, Field and Stockman.
