RANDOM NOTES

From Fruits and Flowers:

Oregon is just bursting the shell from the chrysalis to become the full grown and wide winged butterfly. When its fruit lands shall become productive and all be made available, then we shall have a million people in our state and greater and more reliable prosperity than we now dream of.

It is not necessary that a man should realize a thousand dollars an acre to succeed in fruit-growing. There is reliable and encouraging success at a hundred dollars an acre; for when a man can own and cultivate ten acres and clear $1,000 total per annum for his labor and capital, he is doing well. If he can do better, that is also well, but $100 an acre of gross yield is far better than any farm produce pays, and $1,000 a year for one man and family, is more, by considerable, than intelligent labor averages, even in America.

As your trees grow and spread out, be sure and have a low-built and very gentle pair of horses to use among them. Two fractions a horse cannot be trusted among valuable trees. One of the pioneers among the fruit-growers of Oregon, says he has just an income of $2,000 a year by allowing his horse to plow among his trees.

Every time a single tree touched the back of a tree, it damaged it, and many times killed it—sometimes taking years to die in. Many that did not die are all more ruined and worthless. He soon discovered that he must watch every man's back and prevent his oxen from reaching to work among his trees, if he expected good results.

A man who understands his business as a pruner can at a single glance take in the whole situation of a fruit tree, tell what it needs and how much work is needed to balance it, and give it proper development. Then he proceeds to clip and prune and cut until the well pruned tree stands in its shortened order and rounded form, entirely well balanced and cleanly pruned. Women can prune as well as men, and often better, but when it comes to standing on the rounds of a ladder they usually think "it makes me tired." Perhaps they could do better work with ladders made with broader steps to stand on. The women of a family can do a great deal of work in growing, gathering and curing wines.

The common expression is that the fruit business is sure to overcome. The answer to this is, that it never yet has been overcome. The past season has witnessed immense fruit crops over all North America. No doubt many classes of fruit have reached the bottom prices, yet a well known pruner grows informs us that the yield for the past year netted him eight cents per pound, and his choicest were sold by a large commission house as high as ten cents per pound, and other products of average quality brought six to seven cents. It is a good deal with fruit growing and curing as with the learned professions. "There is always room at the top" said a wise man, and that saying is as well applicable to horticulture as it is to statesmanship or learned professions. It always pays well to excel.

Thousands of people pass through life following some object for which they are not fitted. Many a man whose natural bent is for active, out-door life is forced by wrong ambition to be a poor lawyer, preacher or doctor, and goes through his allotted time a mediocre man in a wrong calling, if not an utter failure, when he could have been a good and successful farmer or fruit-grower. Many a man whose natural qualifications are for mechanics or invention is thrown away in some other calling. The man who by nature should be a scholar is often wasted on some other mode of life.

It has been well said that thousands go through the world who never were at home in their vocation, who missed their way in life and strayed into some calling that did not develop their natural powers. The object of popular education should be to develop in every child the true instincts, the natural powers it is possessed of, so that the man or woman shall be educated to be developed in the true line of natural qualification and ability. The day laborer, even, should be educated in respect to making main strength useful, for he can earn better wages as a result of intelligence. Too many men in all classes do their work imperfectly, and do not even put energy, much less intelligence, into it.

Farming is supposed to be the least intelligent of all industries. Many say, "Any man can be a farmer," but while the majority can make a living on a farm, many make only a poor living, and only a few are successful in growing wealthy; only a few seem to possess the qualifications that make labor result in profit.

Horticulture is a higher and greater art than farming is, in an ordinary sense, and requires more ability and greater study and application. Not every farmer can be successful in fruit-growing, because many have no taste for it. The horticulturist must be adapted to and educated for his work, and be a student of Nature, studying into Nature's processes and the needs of the soil and the habits and needs of every tree he grows and every fruit or vegetable he produces. To be successful he must be capable, and educated, and experienced, or at least capable of making use of the experience of others. It is not so much having means at command as to possess capacity and energy, and know how to use these qualities aright, that insures success in horticulture.

We consider the literature of horticulture as worthy of patronage as that of the highest talent in other respects, and believe those who follow horticulture to be engaged in as honorable a pursuit as any other known to man.

Unlike many other vocations, fruit-growing is in no way complicated with the misfortunes of others. A good doctor may be a very useful citizen, but he prospers upon others' adversity. An honest lawyer may be helpful, but he thrives upon the weakness of poor human nature. It is different with the horticulturist. His calling is to supply the human race with daily food, by means of which life is prolonged, strength is maintained and health secured. His gardens, orchards and vineyards may groan under their burdens of wholesome food products, and no one else is poorer or suffers any misfortune thereby. The horticulturist earns his own living and helps to feed the world by cultivating the soil. By his labor the elements of the soil and air are combined to form products that gratify the taste and support the life of man. Horticulture has other advantages that must not be overlooked. It is a healthful calling. Few vocations promote that fullness of strength and vigor that is here found. And few contribute so much to the higher qualities of taste and education in the works of nature and the good of man.

THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST.

A Great Fruit Region—A Glimpse of the Future.

The Pacific Northwest includes for our purposes, that area as a region for the growth of fruit, a scope of territory that fully equals in area and natural resources some of the great empires of Europe today, and that must in time not distant become the home of many millions who shall be occupied in the cultivation of its rich soils and development of its great and as yet undeveloped resources.

Only with the past decade have facilities for transportation come to assist development and make possible the era of progress and improvement only now commencing that must go on and work out a destiny equal to that of any portion of the North American continent. Fifty years ago the tide of immigration had not set towards the Pacific, and exploring parties were fitted out to investigate and report to the nation. The greatest minds in our nation at that time had very little conception of the value of Oregon, which included then all American interests on the Pacific ocean. When Dr. Marcus Whitman tried to make Daniel Webster comprehend what Oregon might be in 1845, that great statesman refused to believe that the destinies of the nation could extend thus far, and it was entirely due to the efforts of the Oregon pioneers that the empire borders the Pacific for 1,500 miles as it does today.

What we are today here in the Occident, compared to the isolation and wilderness of 1842, bears about the same relation to the future of half a century of progress that is to come, that the date given here to their own day, for as the mind of Webster could not grasp the facts and progress many of us have witnessed and aided to accomplish, so the mind of today may fail to grasp a true idea of what the Pacific Northwest may become when another half century shall have wrought its changes.

West of the Rocky mountains there is today about the same population as occupied the Atlantic shore in 1775, when the colonies asserted their independence. Looking back on the pages of history, we see rapidly culminating events and wonderful progress that leaves all the old world behind. In all the arts of war and peace the world has made wonderful progress since the first immigration came to Oregon in 1842. There is no reason to doubt that invention and skill will unlock nature's secrets and furnish similar progress in the half century to come.

It is true that we possess here soil of unexampled fertility and a climate that is unexcelled on this earth. As to resources, no portion of the Pacific coast equals in wealth of soil, of forests and minerals what are found in this region. When development shall reach maturity and population shall be apportioned to resources, then this Northwest of the Pacific will hold the scepter and dominate this western world. The thousands of water powers that come from our mountain ranges, the mines of iron, coal, copper, and immense forests form a means of wealth, prosperity and success equal to anything the world can grant to any people.

Only yesterday, as it were, the Inland Empire was but a stock range, and Western Oregon and Washington were scantily peopled and had no foreign commerce. It is not the same world we knew ten years ago, and ten years from now we cannot recognize it again. Within a few years the whole Pacific region has become more or less a land of orchards, producing semi-tropical fruits and those of northern zones, and it is only lately discovered that our fruit lands equal in richness of soils and production the most productive soils of California.

Ten years ago this industry was almost unknown, and the value of our fruit land was not understood. Enough is known as the result of experience already had to show that we have a future in fruit growing equal to that of any section in the world. In the future development of our section, this great resource will become an important element. The man who fears there will be no market for coming products simply fails to realize what time has in store for us.

Before many years can pass, every known industry will be successfully employed among us. Great cities will grow to encourage human labor. Development will convert our mines and forests into available resources, and will cause the produce of our soil to increase to supply a home demand for coming millions, as well as to supply the world at large with our fruits as well as cereals. Commerce with Asia and the islands will supply a market, and the Nicaragua canal will make it possible to reach Europe at a reasonable cost.

Of course, all land is not adapted to a fruit, and the need of selecting suitable locations is manifest, but throughout the great empire of the North Pacific there are locations and sections where fruit growing must become a favorite occupation, and where enterprise and intelligent industry will find a rich reward.

It seems as if nature has been chary of her gifts to many sections of earth and has limited the production of choice fruits in the greatest profusion and excellence to a few favored sections. If we then, possess superior advantages of soil and climate for the growth of fruits of this latitude in the greatest excellence and with the most certain results, there can be no question that fruit growing on a large scale will enter into our future and become a means of income and wealth for all time.

We can fully believe that ten years from today with the improvement sure to occur in commerce and transportation, Oregon and Washington will ship millions of dollars worth of choice fruits to the markets of the world, and the introduction of these products abroad will show the world their superior quality as to texture and character and will insure a demand that will create a reliable market.

The future has things in store for us if we only have the enterprise to deserve them.—Fruits and Flowers.

TALAMAIN LETTER.

Editor Graphic:—Again we sit down to write a howling—again as it were for the Newberg paper. The first thought that comes into one's head at the sound of the word Newberg is, an educational, strictly moral, rapidly growing little town, filled to overflowing with a class of people whose characteristics are christianity, friendship, true worth and higher education and progression, all accomplished in a quiet unassuming way. This little town is so pleasantly surrounded with a refreshing element, that moralists find a good supply of stimulants, instead of fields for duty as generally found in small cities, and it is high time the world at large would recognize the importance of these facts and profit by them. Education and refinement tend greatly to the future's welfare and he or she who is so debased as to merely disregard certain laws, must surely reap the fruits of their own heedless excess. Sometimes I think we each and all receive our just punishment for every duty we neglect and every sin we commit, soon after the crime is acted out, and our way of joy or sorrow through life, is largely due to our own guidance and selfishness, and for every act of charity or kindness, we extend to those in need, the same will return to us in time a hundred fold with compound interest, as well as building for us a time enduring reputation for all that is good and true. Be honest to one's self, one's conscience, one's neighbors, one's friends and one's country and be exactly what you are, without one particle of deceit, and you will be blessed with true, everlasting happiness. True happiness comes from making others happy and this is a pleasure we can enjoy every day through one's kindness to all living things, and will leave no room for regret or remorse in after years for slight and petty offenses, which in our selfishness does us no good, costs us an endless amount of sorrow which is covered over with concealed deceit, breeds a restless, burning conscience which we strive to drown in the individual hobby we cling to with a faith that finally is shaken, and we drop unmercifully in the sea of despair, where we must suffer for these heartless cruelties we so recklessly inflicted. False gains are easily and quickly undermined, leaving us stranded high and dry and in a worse condition than before. He that doth a good act will surely be rewarded. He that helps his neighbors along in a truly beneficial way will be blessed and he that works in the schools and churches, with willing hands and an honest heart, will be rewarded by all that is good. I say God bless the teachers of all that is good, they are the rulers. I do not mean simply the teachers holding county certificates, they of course are main factors, but the parents, guardians, ministers and all who are truly alive and awake to the good interest of the coming generations. Our free, happy, independent country was earned by the blood of many a true soldier and it is now the duty of each and all to train the young up to a sense of honor for themselves and nation and to properly appreciate a country whose every blessing has cost so dearly. Don't rate a man's worth by the size of his pocket book or the cut of his coat but look a little closer and size up his heart, his brain and his goodness all of which will shine like diamonds even if covered by countless patches. Give us the people of good common sense and a duty of right and wrong, people who are ambitious and we are satisfied to trust them as citizens, worth a dozen families of wealth as a rule. It is an astonishing fact, but the majority of the criminals of the land are children of wealth whose parents were either so busily engaged in fashions and what is termed fashionable society and money making schemes that their own children were shamefully neglected, and idleness always breeds contempt and sin. These parents must consequently suffer for these neglects, for duty demands of them, to properly educate their offspring and no poverty is so great but that a sense of right and wrong may be taught.

Newberg is a town whose inhabitants are known far and near as using every means possible of advancing education in all that is good and true and everything demoralizing is speedily extinguished from this its. Students from a distance who are trusted to the care of instructors during the school year are given every attention, in department etc., as well as common school studies and parents can safely rely on their children being admitted into and entertained by the very best families the place affords. Nothing can give one more genuine pleasure than to visit our schools and note the improvements that are going on. Then hesitate a minute and ask yourself, "well, and what does this all really mean?" The answer that echoes back will be of a most gratifying nature, these little ones, the very reflection of their parents, stand before us, all eager to grasp and retain each and every new idea disclosed to them by their patient teachers. Good schools, good churches and good common sense all used well and often, will soon start a growth of intellect that is truly surprising, the fruits of which will crown us with everlasting joy.
