Butterflies That Bath.
In The Victoria Naturalist G. Lyell, Jr., of South Melbourne, notes that while walking along the edge of a mountain habitat in Gippsland he observed a peculiar habit of the Victorian butterfly, Papilio maenades. One of these butterflies had seen to alight close to the water, into which it backed till the whole of the body and the lower part of the hind wings were submerged, the two forelegs alone retaining their hold of the dry land. After remaining in this position for something like half a minute it flew away, apparently refreshed.

"During the morning," says Mr. Lyell,
"I noticed quite a number doing the same thing. In one instance no less than four were seen to be within a space of not more than three yards, and to make sure that I was not deceived I captured several as they rose from the water, and found in each case the body and lower edge of the hind wings quite wet. While in the water the fluttering of the wings, so noticeable at other times, was suspended, and so intent were the butterflies in the enjoyment of their cold bath that they would hardly move, even when actually touched by the net."

"Apparently the heat of the weather drove them to the water, as immediately they emerged they flew up again to the hill sides. I have often noticed butterflies of the Nymphalidae family settling near the pools, and apparently imbibing the moisture from the damp sand round the edges, but never before have I seen butterflies enter the water. Possibly it may be a peculiar habit of this particular species or genus. Numbers of the white butterfly, Pieris harpalpe, were flying about at the same time, but I noticed none alight near the water."
