

Ex-chief of police of Portland, S. B. Parrish, who crossed the plains with his parents when a child in his mother's arms died in Portland last Monday after a three weeks illness.

It appears that silver is not being set down on as hard as some campaign orators would have the people believe. During the fiscal year just closed Uncle Sam coined 21,203,701 silver dollars.

Five thousand barrels of American apples were recently sold in the Berlin market. The Germans appear to be glad to get our apples, even though they are inclined to be a little shy of the American hog.

A Cherokee Indian is taking the Keely cure, and a friend says that if the Keely cure can knock out the Indian agency whiskey its friends will be quite willing to back it against the kind that is dispensed in the Kansas drug stores.

An exchange says: "We have seen people in church trying to look angelic while they sing, 'shall we know each other there,' when they wouldn't speak to each other when they met on the street. They may know each other, but the question is where?"

The Endeavorers from the East who travel through the Willamette valley will look on our fields of ripening grain that promise an excellent yield and orchards that are loaded with fruit. Nature seems to have been doing her best lately to prepare Oregon for the coming of the visitors.

We are pleased to quote from the St. Louis Globe Democrat: "North Carolina's experiment in using convict labor to build roads is said to show surprisingly favorable results. It costs 6c less a day per convict than to keep the men idle in prison, and their health is greatly improved."

B. S. Pague in summing up his latest bulletin says: Adverse conditions prevailed throughout Oregon to April 1st. During April, the conditions were ideal. May was not very favorable, being warm and dry. June had just such weather as was needed; and now the prospects for all crops are unusually good. A great crop year in Oregon appears to be certain.

The reporter of a Canadian paper is responsible for the statement that he found Mr. Bryan in bed wearing a heavy embroidered silk night shirt. What if Mr. Bryan does wear silk night shirts? The sheekles he is getting for carrying on the silver campaign enables him to pay for all the fancy night shirts or day shirts he may want, so whose business is it?

The Brownville Times very pertinently remarks that "some of our legislators, who were scared nearly to death for fear a session of the legislature would be held last winter, and they be compelled to carry out their election pledges, are now working themselves to death for fear that an extra session will not be called, and a chance given them to redeem themselves."

The Southern Illinois Press association has adopted a rule to omit the title "Dr." in speaking of a physician. This is a retaliation upon the Southern Illinois medical association that expelled two members because they advertised. In Ohio the doctors are fighting proprietary medicines and some of the publishers threaten in every death notice to mention the name of the attending physician.

In the August number of the Delinquent Mrs. A. S. Potter writing of social life in St. Louis shows the continued potency of the Creole influence in that interesting semi-southern metropolis. No. 4 of Jennie Drake's New York times is devoted to a sprightly and amusing analysis of the woman who shops. Dr. Grace Peckham Murray continues her "Talk on health and beauty" with a discussion of the various forms of exercise especially beneficial to her sex. This number of the magazine will be of especial interest to the ladies.

Carey Martin, of the secretary of states' office, has been delving among historic records in the state department and gives the following: "A law of the provisional legislature of Oregon June 22, 1844, made it legal for males over the age of sixteen and females over twelve to marry, the consent of the parents being given." "An act of the provisional legislature of Oregon December 12, 1845, authorized the ministers of the gospel, justices of the supreme court and justices of the peace to perform marriage ceremonies. This was about the earliest legislation on this subject in Oregon."

The Graphic acknowledges the receipt of copies of Crawford's and Kip's Journals which have been recently published under the direction of Prof. F. G. Young, instructor of economics and history in the University of Oregon. Prof. Young is searching after everything pertaining to the early history of the Pacific Northwest and he will be glad to receive any journals or other written history of this character. The Medorum Crawford Journal has been read with much interest for he was one of the early pioneers of Yamhill county. The journal is a diary kept by him from the date on which he left his home in New York in the Spring of 1842 until he reached the Willamette valley in the following fall. It makes interesting reading and the journal is well worth preserving.

The Oregon City Enterprise says: A noticeable feature at all country gatherings nowadays is the intelligent and well dressed appearance of the people one meets. The typical "hayseed" of former days is now seldom seen and in his place have come men and women whose manners and dress will compare with their town cousins. The farm houses of today are not what they were even but a few years ago. Now, newspapers, periodicals and books are found in nearly every sitting room while the debating societies, reading circles, Sunday school, church and lodge rooms which are found in almost every community afford a place where manners are polished, ideas broadened and a higher culture given, so much so that these gatherings have become veritable schools wherein an intellectual uplift is given the rural population and they are made the equals of the residents of the city. With this intellectual and social development will come that contentment which is so essential to the prosperity and happiness of a people, the lack of which has rendered the country people so dissatisfied with their lot and which has been the cause of the wholesale desertions of the farm which in recent years have taken place. When the boys and girls of the country feel that they are not being looked upon as gawks, and that their education, manners and dress are such as will destroy that class distinction which has heretofore handicapped and made them feel to be inferiors of youth of the towns, will the farm home retain its attractions for them and social economists will have to be put at their wits ends in devising schemes to maintain the balance of population between the city and the country.

The Labor Troubles.

The fact that the coal miners have determined to quit work, thus largely increasing the area of the labor disturbance caused by the iron, steel and glass workers, who are already out, is an unfortunate circumstance. Of course, the demands of the miners, like those of iron, steel and glass men, appear to be the general public to be moderate. The "fair days pay for a fair days work" which the miners ask is eminently reasonable. In the best of times the wages of these workers are low, and they have been reduced in the past year or two more than once. The public is aware of this, and sympathizes with the miners in their sufferings. No class of men felt the ill effect of the convulsion of 1893 earlier than the miners, or have been afflicted longer. In any general revival of business which comes to the country they certainly deserve to share.

But like all other questions, this matter of the strike has two sides, and to each side the general public must give a hearing. The coal operators declare that under the present condition of trade they are unable to grant the miners' demands. While wages have gone down they have not, the operators contend, gone down faster or farther than coal prices. Moreover, whenever prices went up, they say, wages generally advanced simultaneously. Like all other branches of business the coal trade was injuriously affected by the financial disturbances which began four years ago, and some of the losses necessarily shifted on to the miners. This is the rule in all occupations in times of distress. There may not be much comfort to them in this reflection, but it is the truth, as everybody knows. Though the miners, whose wages are low even in normal times, feel the cuts in compensation more than do some other sorts of laborers, yet in some degree at least the same kind of an affliction has come to the majority of men, employers as well as employed.

While public sympathy will be with the strikers so long as they refrain from violating the laws, the folly of starting a labor contest at this period can not be too strongly condemned. Just at the time when the tariff bill was about to go on the statute book, when adequate revenue would be furnished to the government and adequate protection would be provided for all industries, when confidence was almost fully restored, and when an era of trade activity and prosperity such as the country had not known in a dozen years was about to open, this labor conflict is precipitated to disturb all business calculations, to clog the wheels of industry, and to postpone the solid and permanent trade expansion which was in sight. The lesson of the disaster which came to the strikers in the labor contests of the past score of years ought to teach the miners wisdom. The result of the railroad workers' folly of 1877, of the Missouri Pacific madness of 1880 and of the Debs crime of 1894 should teach labor societies the fatuity of precipitating a struggle in times when, as now, the chances are overwhelmingly against them.—Globe Democrat.

It's a dreadful thing to be as near sighted as Dick Doodles, remarked the young woman sympathetically. It must lead to embarrassment.

"Mabel, the doctor says you drink entirely too much coffee. It is not good for you."

"Why mama, it doesn't hurt me a particle, and I like it too well to quit using it. I just couldn't get along without my coffee."

"And Mm. Looecks, the celebrated authority on beauty, says it is ruinous to the complexion."

"O, well if the doctor thinks I ought not to drink it any more I'll drop it, of course."

Johnny, said a Jefferson county female teacher, whose age is concealed by the arts well known to women, Johnny how many presidents have we had in the United States? I dunno, said the boy. Why, replied she, when I was your age I could tell at once the name of every President. Of course you could replied the lad, because when you were my age there had been but two or three presidents. Johnny, take your seat; the lesson for today is ended.

The first wheat put in the shock in Yamhill county was cut Monday, July 5th, by Jerome Derby with a new Jones lever binder, bought of Manning Bros. He has sixty-five acres of wheat on his father's farm west of this city from which he expects a yield of 2,000 bushels. The field harvested Monday is an exceedingly early variety, the seed having been brought here from Missouri by Mr. Rhodes.—Reporter.

A Lie Told.

Thousands die annually with this dread disease. Wittur's Cough Cure will cure. Price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.
