Excursion to Malheur.
 A merry excursion party could not have asked for a more propitious day for a pleasant boat ride than was Monday of the Fourth. Though of course it was a little chilly on the river in the morning it had cleared up bright by 10 o'clock. The steamer Undine left the dock here at 6:05 with about 125 excursionists aboard, and pulled right out like she was sent for making it to Oregon City in an hour and three-quarters. Here we first learned of the great naval victory of Sampson, that mighty man of valor, and this spicy piece of 4th of July news put the party in an excellent frame of mind which lasted all day. As we came into Portland we got a view of two of Uncle Sam's torpedo boats which had been built there. The Davis was in the river, already launched, but the Fox was still on the ways ready for launching. Her launching was to have been performed at 10 o'clock and the Undine waited until that hour, but then steamed on up the river not getting much more than out of sight, we afterwards learned when the Fox slid down into the Willamette.
 In less than an hour we were in the noble Columbia. Undoubtedly there is no river in America grander in immenity of volume of water, nor surpassing in the scenery along its banks than the beautiful Columbia the pride of the West. In novels and all American works of fiction it is the fashion to lay scenes of romantic interest along the palisades of the Hudson. But this will not always be so, for the Hudson, though grand in comparison to her surrounding views will yield the palm to grander scenes of nature in the land "Where rolls the Oregon." But even an enthusiastic party of excursionists won't thrive on scenery alone and by 12 o'clock began to cast longing eyes towards various and sundry kinds of baskets thrust away in hidden corners. And it was not long till every available place of room on the boat was taken for the spreading of the picnic dinners. After this impressive service, more attention than ever was paid to the splendid casts of nature, growing continually more magnificent, and along the abrupt shores were noticed several summer residences of prominent citizens of Portland.

 About 2 o'clock we came in sight of the majestic Multnomah Falls, keeping 800 feet over a sheer precipice upon the rocks below. Having landed, most of the party made their way to the falls which are about a quarter of a mile back from the river. A few made their way clear around back and behind the falling waters and crossed the stream in front of the falls. After gazing enraptured at the crystal and sparkling, leaping waters all were aboard the Undine again ready for the home trip.
 In about an hour the people collected in the cabin and an excellent program was rendered. S. T. Stanley read a short selected article, and Mrs. G. H. Bennett, Miss Edith McCrea and Miss Bernice Woodward recited. M. Z. Kirk of Iowa gave an excellent address. He carefully and thoroughly reviewed the history of Oregon from her first settlement to the present time, dwelling upon the privations and courage of her early heroes. From this he made the application that the same elements of courageous citizenship are essential now for a christian government. Rev. G. H. Bennett also delivered a good address, enjoining American patriotism and citizenship. The music of the afternoon consisted of a solo, Miss Mabel Edwards, a mixed quartet, Miss Jackson, Mrs. Robertson, and Messrs. Jackson and Allen, and a male quartet Messrs. Allen, Lewis, Woodward and Jackson.
 In the evening the audience again gathered in the cabin and a regular musicale was enjoyed. The orchestra which played a grand deal throughout the day, gave several selections and deserves much credit for its excellent music rendered and it was greatly appreciated. It consisted of Mrs. C. B. Wilson, and Messrs. S. J. Lashier, Luther B. Charles and Charles A. Hodson. The two quartets mentioned above each rendered several good pieces. The musical exercises closed by the audience joining in and singing "America."
 At half past nine the Undine arrived at the Newberg dock, having made the quickest trip ever made up the Columbia from here. In the first hour from the falls she made 22 miles. A finer and more obliging set of officers were never seen on a boat than were on the Undine. They did everything to make the excursionists enjoy themselves and from the enthusiastic expressions heard they certainly succeeded.

 Master Orville Smith was down from Dayton last Sunday visiting with his brother Seth.
 Dr. Jeffords, of Portland, rode up from Portland last Sunday on his wheel and visited at J. C. Colcord's, returning on the boat Monday morning.
 Arthur Hodson, of Heppner, Morrow county, arrived in town Wednesday evening and is visiting with his brothers, Prof. J. C. and Charles Hodson.
 Oscar Symonds, of Spiceland, Indiana who is representing the Spiceland Cabinet Company on this coast came up from Portland last Monday evening and visited with President Newlin's.
 I have just received a fine line of those cashmere factory remnants. They are all wool and 44 inches wide, all shades. They will not last long. Call early.
 C. E. NAWORSKI, Springbrook Oregon.

Drew and Ore Price, George Larkin, Maurice Townsend and Walter Macy left on Tuesday for Walla Walla, Washington, with their traps packed with garb suitable for the harvest fields. The boys expect to be gone until fall.
 The time for which D. R. Jackson was employed by E. C. Ward & Co., having expired, Mr. Jackson is arranging to open a feed store on his own account, in the old drug store building near the railroad.
 Hon. J. W. Hobbs, of McMinnville, has been appointed as a deputy revenue collector. His territory will be the west side of the Willamette valley with headquarters at McMinnville. Mr. Hobbs is well qualified for the position and the Graphic extends congratulations.

The bicycle races held here last Saturday were not a big success. The crowd was small and the succession of tumbles by different riders was a discouraging feature of the program. Walter Hembree, of McMinnville, lost control of his wheel in the second race and went tumbling out among the stumps, smashing his wheel and sustaining some severe though not serious bruises. Oscar Cox also let his wheel slip from under him and he and DeVore of Dayton landed in a heap with some scratches. Arthur Heston and John Walker did some good riding for boys.

Who Will Pay for the War?
 An interesting question in connection with this law is how far the new taxes will be really borne by those who pay them in the first instance, and to what extent they will be shifted to the great body of consumers. The act facilitates the shifting of the tobacco tax by providing for packages containing one-sixth less than those formerly used, and doubtless the customary size of a glass of beer will also be reduced in many cases. On the other hand, the tax on patent medicines and other proprietary articles is almost too small to increase retail prices, except by checking in some degree the tendency to sell these goods at cut rates. The act specifically provides that the tax on sleeping car and parlor-car tickets is to be paid by the companies issuing them, and there seems to be little chance that either this or the tax on bills of lading will be shifted; but tax on passage tickets to foreign ports will doubtless be found to increase the expense of trips to Europe this summer. Of more importance is the effect on prices of sugar and oil, of the tax on gross receipts of refiners. Professor Seligman, in his work on "The Shifting and Incidence of Taxation," says, "It is plain that a tax on monopoly gross receipts can never be shifted," because prices of monopoly articles are already such as to produce the maximum profits. From this reasoning it follows that so far as the Sugar Trust and the Standard Oil Company are monopolists and not subject to the laws of the competitive trade they will have to bear the burden of the taxes levied upon them. But it is never safe to predict the precise result of a tax or of any other one of the many elements which determine prices. It is possible for example, that the prices of sugar and oil might be increased temporarily in the present emergency for the purpose of discouraging a resort to the gross receipts tax as a permanent source of revenue.—From "Our new war taxes," by Max West, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.
