Farmers who keep common sheep and depend upon wool, do not know how specimens of some breeds may be made to reach great weights. A 2-year-old grade Lincoln wether in England was slaughtered, its live weight being 434 pounds. The carcass weighed 304 pounds, the loose fat 34 pounds, the skin, blood and entrails 90 pounds and the waste 6 pounds. Sheep weighing 300 pounds live weight are numerous in this country.

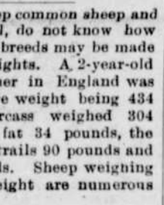
CATARRH

Catarrh has become such a common disease that a person entirely free from this disgusting complaint is seldom met with. It is customary to speak of Catarrh as nothing more serious than a bad cold, a simple inflammation of the nose and throat. It is, in fact, a complicated and very dangerous disease; if not at first, it very soon becomes so.

The blood is quickly contaminated by the foul secretions, and the poison through the general circulation is carried to all parts of the system.

Salves, washes and sprays are unsatisfactory and disappointing, because they do not reach the seat of the trouble. S. S. S. does. It cleanses the blood of the poison and eliminates from the system all catarrhal secretions, and thus cures thoroughly and permanently the worst cases.

Mr. P. H. McAllister, of Harrodsburg, Ky., writes: "Having been a terrible sufferer from Catarrh, and being now sound and well, the question often put to me is, 'What cured you?' In answer I feel it my duty to state that Swift's Specific is the medicine. I am such a true believer in the efficacy of Swift's Specific that I can honestly and conscientiously recommend it to any one suffering from Catarrh. Have recommended it to many, and am happy to say that those whom I have induced to use it can bear me out in the statement that it will cure any case of Catarrh if taken according to directions."



SSS is the only purely vegetable blood purifier known, and the greatest of all blood medicines and tonics.

If you have Catarrh don't wait until it becomes deep-seated and chronic, but begin at once the use of S. S. S., and send for our book on blood and skin diseases and write our physicians about your case.

Cornelia's Double Mistake.

MISS CORNELIA LUNT was the only child of two good people who had not married until they reached the years which find most wedded pairs with their children well grown up about them. They had been happy, however, and when they died left their daughter a little income, which, by close pinching, she could manage to live upon.

Cornelia was not a pretty girl, but thousands of plainer girls had married and settled while she remained a spinster. Perhaps the fact that she was by no means a good-natured person had something to do with it.

In her youth she had comported herself scornfully to well-disposed young men who belonged to the mechanic classes and had declared that she would only give her hand and heart to a merchant, a physician, or a clergyman. Merchants were rare in Bottlehole, the only specimens of that order being two old bachelors, still connected with a New York firm. The two doctors were both married and the clergymen always had large families.

Miss Cornelia's ambitious hopes were never realized, and her father's apprentice, Tim Cornell, who had admired her, and had been quite a believer in her as an "elegant and genteel person," finally pronounced her "mighty proud and haughty," and abandoned his suit. Miss Cornelia at last awoke to the knowledge that she was getting on in life, and that if she was not careful people would find it out.

But for that dreadful family Bible in which the record of her birth was written down, she would have felt safe in slicing off ten years of her life—a proceeding which she fancied would increase her value in the eyes of a certain Mr. Dumsday, who had recently paid her a few solemn calls. He was really an old man himself, but the older the man the younger, generally, one finds his choice of a wife to be.

Poor Miss Cornelia! She eyed that well-thumbed Bible which her companion and assistant, Cousin Betsy Baker, always would have upon a stand in the parlor, with absolute horror.

She sat over her grate fire late one night thinking over the matter.

Who knew her exact age? Cousin Betsy. But Cousin Betsy would not wish to quarrel with her, and was too old a woman to think her anything but young. The clergyman who baptized her. But he was superannuated and lived with his son-in-law in another State. The family doctor was dead, and the dear old gentleman who had boarded with them from her babyhood went to Europe years before, and was probably dead. Good Mr. Noire! But she should never hear of him again. Yes, it was safe. She would do it.

It was night—half-past 12 at least—the hour when "churchyards yawn and graves give up their dead." Miss Cornelia arose. She stood before the fire with her back toward it, and took the candlestick in her hand.

Any one who had observed her would certainly have believed that she was going straight to poor Cousin Betsy's room to end that lady's life by a jab of the sharp little knife blade, but she paused at the candlestick, knelt down, opened the family Bible at the flyleaf, and slowly, cautiously began to scrape, scrape, scrape at the last two figures of the record of her birth.

Then she crossed the room, took from a fireside cupboard a pen and inkstand, wrote two other figures in the place of those she had erased, blew upon the leaf until it was dry, carefully touched up the rest of the record to match in brightness, and drew back to read the amended lines, which now plainly stated to all beholders that she had entered this world thirty years before instead of forty.

"Cornelia."

It seemed to come from above. Cornelia looked up expecting to see something dreadful. It was repeated:

"Cornelia, ain't you coming to bed?"

It was only Cousin Betsy speaking through a disused register, which had once conveyed heat from a stove in the sitting-room to the chamber above.

All in a cold perspiration, Cornelia managed to reply that she would come in a moment, and then closing the Bible and putting away the writing materials she crept upstairs, a world of horrible unseen things close after her.

Mr. Dumsday regularly "came a courting" now. And he was a rich widower, whose married daughter professed herself anxious that "pa" should have some one to take care of him. Miss Cornelia had quite made up her mind that lavender should be the color of her wedding dress—a copper-colored bride expectant always does.

And the two were sitting together one evening talking confidentially about rheumatism and its best liniment, when the doorbell rang and a tall, lean gentleman, in a suit of black, was ushered into the parlor.

"Miss Cornelia Lunt, I believe," he said.

"Yes, sir," said Miss Cornelia.

The gentleman bowed, handed her a card with "C. Dodridge, Solicitor," upon it, and took the seat she offered.

"I understand that your respected parents are no more, ma'am," said the solicitor. "They would remember better than you do, probably, a period of thirty years ago when one Mr. Noire boarded with them."

"Yes, sir," said Cornelia, growing red in the face. "I've heard them speak of him."

"Ah," said the gentleman, "he was a dear friend as well as a client of mine. He died about two months ago in London. He was wealthy at the time of his death, and he never forgot the extreme kindness of the friends of thirty years ago, who knew him in his days of comparative poverty. Yes, they are gone also; but the little girl who waited on him so lovingly still lives. She was 11 years old at that time. I suppose I address her?"

"No, sir," said Miss Lunt, redder than ever—as Mr. Dumsday turned an attentive ear to this dreadful statement—and feeling that one lie begot many, and that having fibbed in the family Bible she must stick to it or die—"No, sir. I was not born at that date."

"I have my old friend's record," said Mr. Dodridge—"18— was the date of his arrival here. You were 1 month old then—18— was the date of his departure. Plainly you were 11 years of age. You attached yourself fondly to my old friend's heart, madam."

"No, I didn't," said Miss Cornelia, tartly. "I ought to know. I never saw him. I was born just after he left, I've been told. There's the Bible on the table; look at the date."

She opened the volume at the fatal flyleaf; the lawyer perused it slowly.

"I see, I see," he said. "Well, well; and who was this little girl?"

Agony of agonies! Here was another lie needed. Mr. Dumsday's eyes opened widely. He listened more intently. He looked at the lawyer; he looked at the lady. She must fib again, and blackly this time.

"That was a little adopted child who died," said Miss Cornelia faintly. "They didn't think they should have any family of their own."

"I see," said the lawyer, rising—"I see. My friend hoped she had grown to be a woman. Good-day."

"And I can't see why you should come here to add to a lady's age," said Miss Cornelia. "I'm sure it's impolite."

"Madam," said Mr. Dodridge, hat in hand, "I have an excuse; Mr. Noire, good old man, left all his fortune to that little girl. Had she lived she would be an immense heiress. I paved the way—paved the way, that's all."

He departed; Miss Cornelia bowed him out. After all, what did it matter? Fortune, in the person of Mr. Dumsday, was at her feet, and she had saved ten years of her age in his eyes.

But alas! what ailed Mr. Dumsday? He had arisen; his face looked pale, his countenance anxious. He shook his head slowly, went to the candlestick, folded the leaves of the family Bible, and spoke as follows:

"Cornely, from what I see you're just about 30 years of age, aren't ye?"

"Yes," said Cornelia, wonderingly.

"This is a trial to me, Cornely," said Mr. Dumsday. "I know I've been to blame if it come to nothing, but we must part."

"Did you think I was younger?" said Cornelia. "Is that it?"

"No, Cornely," said Mr. Dumsday; "but I took a little oath to my daughter, Jemmimy—Mrs. Nutmegs, that is—never to marry a second wife under 40. People generally thinks you rising 40, so I picked you out. Good-by, Cornely. I hope I ain't spiled yer prospex. Some younger man will——"

"O!" cried Cornelia. "O, come back! I'll tell the truth. I am 40."

"Records can't lie. I seed it in the Bible," said Mr. Dumsday. "Farewell, Cornely. It's a cross, but I must bear it."—New York Evening News.

LORD RUSSELL'S DILEMMA.

Mistaken for a Thief He Made a Ludicrous Exit from the Scrape.

Once when he first came to London and was laying the foundation of his great career, the future lord chief justice went to the pit of a theater. The piece was popular, the pit was crowded and the young advocate had only standing room. All of a sudden a man at his side cried out that his watch was stolen. Mr. Russell and two other men were hemmed in. "It is one of you three," cried the man minus the watch.

"Well, we had better go out and be searched," said Mr. Russell, with the alertness of mind that did not fail him at a trying moment amid an excited crowd.

A detective was at hand and the suggestion was accepted, says the London Express. As Mr. Russell walked out the idea flashed through his mind that if the man behind him had the stolen property he would probably try to secrete it in the pocket of his front rank man. Quick as thought he drew his coat tails about him—only to feel, to his horror, something large and smooth and round already in his pocket. While he was still wondering what this might mean for him, the detective energetically seized the hindmost man, exclaiming: "What, you rascal, at it again!" To Mr. Russell and the other man he apologized and bade them go free. But Mr. Russell, before he had taken many steps, reflected that he could not keep the watch. He went back to the box office and explained, with a courage on which he afterward said he rarely experienced greater demands, that, though he did not take the watch, he had it. So saying he put his hand into his pocket and pulled out—a forgotten snuff box.

Sure Enough Tale.

In one of the private schools here in town there is a small boy who is always cheerfully miles behind everybody else. He is not a dull boy, but learning does not appeal to him as being a thing especially to be desired. Recently the teacher told the class in composition that on the next day she would expect each of them to be able to write a short anecdote. She explained with great care the meaning of the word anecdote, and next day when she called the class up to write, all but the laggard went at once to work.

"Why don't you write an anecdote, Rob?" asked the teacher.

"I forget what an anecdote is," said Rob, undisturbed.

"I explained it yesterday, Rob; and you ought to remember," said the teacher, a bit out of patience. "An anecdote is a tale. Now write."

Rob bent over his slate, and with much twisting of brow and writhing of lip ground out his task. When the slates were collected his was at the very top of the heap. The teacher picked it up, and this is what she read:

"Yesterday we had soup made from the anecdote of an ox."—Youth's Companion.

Killed the Kisses.

"Yes, they tried to live on bread and cheese and kisses."

"Didn't it work?"

"No, she made the bread and George furnished the Roquefort, and after that nobody wanted any kisses."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

MISS FLETCHER'S SUCCESS.

The Daughter of a Former Governor of South Dakota Attains an Enviable Position.

From the Oregon Independent, Salem, Ore.

The daughter of Hon. J. H. Fletcher, formerly governor of South Dakota, but now a resident of Salem, Oregon, has lately attained an enviable position. Her success is remarkable, especially when the fact is known that for some time it was feared her career would be shortened because of ill health.

Ex-Governor Fletcher in speaking of the happy event in his daughter's life said:

"For over two years my daughter had been declining from a strong, healthy, rosy-cheeked person to a pale, weakly and helpless girl. She was afflicted with terrible headaches, and apparently grew weaker and more languid, and apparently without cause. We became greatly alarmed and feared that her days were already numbered.

"I tried several doctors, one after the other, but all without avail. Finally, to please a friend, I bought a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and to our surprise, before it was used her headaches ceased, the color began to return to her cheeks and lips and her strength began to assert itself.

"I bought five boxes more and by the time she had finished them she was completely restored to her health, and today our hearts are gladdened with the society of a robust, rosy and healthy girl instead of a pale, tired and sickly one. In her case the transformation was rapid and wonderful, and I can never speak too highly of the splendid merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

No discovery of modern times has proved such a boon to women as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Acting directly on the blood and nerves, invigorating the body, regulating the functions, they restore the strength and health to the exhausted woman when every effort of the physician proves unavailing.

For the growing girl they are of the utmost benefit, for the mother indispensable, for every woman invaluable.

Everywhere Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are recognized as a specific for diseases of the blood and nerves. For paralysis, locomotor ataxia, and other diseases long supposed incurable, they have proved their efficacy in thousands of cases. They are one of the greatest blessings ever be stowed upon mankind.

This remedy is sold by druggists generally, or will be sent, postpaid, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50.

Chinese Like Americans Best.

Up to the beginning of the present troubles, it has been somewhat remarkable fact, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer, that no American citizen, traveler, business man, diplomat or missionary, has ever been murdered in China by the Chinese. This can be said of the citizens of none of the other great powers which have had constant and long-continued intercourse with the East. This, it is said, is not a mere coincidence, or accident. The Chinese like Americans. Of course, the statement is made with the reservation that they do not like any foreigners as a resident of China, but as compared with the people of the great European powers, they like the Americans. Whenever they ask a man of what nationality he is, and his answer is that he is an American, they at once exclaim, "We are friends."
