E. H. WOODWARD, EDITOR & PUBLISHER. W. C. WOODWARD, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Entered as second-class matter at the postoffice at Newberg, Oregon.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24, 1932.

In our sister state north of the Columbia, it doesn't seem to be exactly a case of the office seeking the man. At any rate the man is willing to be found.

Chief Justice Brewer quotes the constitution to prove that he is right in saying, "United States are" rather than "United States is." This much mooted question was decided the other way about three quarters of a century after the constitution was adopted.

The proceedings at the Pan American conference in Mexico were interrupted the other day by an earthquake. However, as the Chileans seemed to have charge of the exercises of the day, a little disturbance in the earthquake line could easily pass as a part of the program.

The tenacity with which some of the opposition papers hold on to that yellow report that President Roosevelt publicly gave General Miles a vindictive and passionate rebuke, indicates how hard pressed they are to register a kick against the new executive. The report was authoritatively and decisively given the lie immediately after its circulation, but it seems a sweet morsel which is hard for the other fellows to surrender.

The McKinley National Memorial Association, with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, has found it necessary to issue a note of caution to the public against fakes who are collecting money under false pretenses. There are all kinds of rascals, but those who would thus take advantage of the general sentiment of affection and honor felt for the martyred president, deserve a name of their own.

Great preparations are being made for the Olympic Games of 1934 which are to take place at Chicago. In 1896, the games were held at Athens, after the manner and traditions of the old Greek games of antiquity. While the seating capacity of the Stadium at Athens was fifty thousand, the mammoth Chicago stadium is to seat seventy-five thousand people, and the scope of the whole affair will probably be enlarged in like proportion, in harmony with the American spirit of enterprise.

The penny postage enthusiasts receive little satisfaction from the new postmaster-general relative to the furtherance of their pet hobby. When questioned on the subject the other day, he replied, "I will say upon this point, that the ideal rate would be a penny postage, but it seems to me that the best facilities that can be obtained require first consideration. There should be an extension of those before their efficiency is curtailed by a reduction of revenues." Mr. Payne doubtless voices the sentiments of the people in general, who would rather have an improved service for two cents than an indifferent or poor service for one cent.

Rev. H. K. Hines, well known as one of the pioneer missionaries of the Northwest, died at his home near Portland early Sunday morning. In his death Oregon loses one more of her pioneer heroes who will long be remembered for what he has done for his fellowmen. Says the Oregonian of him, "Dr. Hines was a man of great usefulness and consecration. For nearly half a century he has labored zealously for the upbuilding of this region in moral and education lines. Of him it may be truly said, 'Well done, good and faithful servant,' and none who knew the earnestness and devotion of his labors will withhold the scenes of earth he has 'entered into the joy' of the Lord he so loved to serve. The railery and sneers of the scoffer lose their point in the presence of such a life."

Correspondence from Washington gives it out that General Miles is an avowed aspirant for the nomination for the presidency two years hence at the hands of the democratic party. It is claimed that while for some time the General has had aspirations in this direction, they have been greatly strengthened by the deserved censure which he lately received at the hands of the President. In short, he wishes to settle his case with President Roosevelt by beating him for the presidency. Miles is now flushed with a flurry of sympathy which the public has extended him, but he will blunder irrevocably if he thinks this will seat him in the executive chair. The people are not in the habit of making presidents for the purpose of settling personal differences. As the general in chief of the army, General Miles has the respect of the people; as a grouchy candidate for the presidency, he will have their careless contempt.

The Silverton Appeal man escapes the harassing cares of the political arena by turning over four columns of his paper to local representatives of as many political parties, with the privilege of fighting it out among themselves. The result is highly entertaining to say the least. The G. O. P. man fires the introductory salute with the proud assertion, "The republican party has always been able to look back with pride on its past record and has fewer regrets than any other party that has been in control of our national government." The democrat declares, "It is as plain that the G. O. P. is controlled by a set of unscrupulous sort of pirates, as the most prominent feature of Mr. Hanna's face," and that "we are in as much danger today as in 1776 or when the South seceded." The prohibitionist gets back at the republican, who has had the hardihood to give a little advice to the cold water enthusiasts, by suggesting that if he attended more temperance meetings personally, rather than take his information second-hand, he might be better qualified to raise his voice. The socialist, with an eye single to the propagation of his pet "ism," exclaims as with a voice from the wilderness, "Competition is as wrong as fighting or warfare. God made the earth large enough for everybody." If in a multitude of counsellers there is safety, it would appear that the rest of us might fold our hands and rest easy while the Silverton Solons save the country.

The Milton Eagle says this to the business men, of their relation to the home paper: "The local paper reaches the people you want and must have if you continue in business. A stream can scarcely rise above its source, and the local paper, in any town, is just what the push and enterprise of the town make it. It has always been the policy of the Eagle to sacrifice everything to the advancement of this city in business and in morals, and the policy will be continued just so long as its works are appreciated by the public, but there must be reciprocity. The paper cannot live on salubrious climate alone. If you want trade, if you have an interest in the growth of your town, if you want a correct impression of the size and importance of your city to go abroad, then see that your business is well represented in the columns of your local paper. If, on the contrary you want the far rubbed the right way on your back all of the time, and are willing to rub ours the right way none of the time, you are sadly mistaken for we cannot do it and subsist. Every mill, shop and business house of the city should be advertised in the home paper. Give people abroad a right conception of your town and show the people at home you have something to sell and are here to do business."

THE DEVIL'S SOLILOQUY.

Suggested by Hearing a Man Speak Disparagingly of a Young Girl.

One night as the devil sat musing alone in the midst of his cozy, warm fire, and trying to figure the difference in guilt between a thief and an all-around liar, his memory turned to the scenes of his youth, and his eyes filled with hot boiling tears, so he took down his ledger and turned to a page, dated back about six thousand years.

"I suppose," he exclaimed as he glanced through the book, "I'm doing the best that I can, for my business denotes a continual increase ever since the creation of man. I've cribbed a good harvest for 6000 years, and should be content with the yield, and give my opponent permission to have gleanings I leave in the field.

"I've gathered a very diversified crop of merchants and lawyers galore; I've bound politicians in bundles until all of my fingers are sore. I've fiddlers, gamblers and insurance men, I've murderers forgers and liars, and filled up my furnace with hoodlums 'till they actually put out the fires.

"I've railroad conductors and doctors to spare, horse traders and preachers to spend; republicans, democrats, prohis and pops, and two or three newspaper men. But there is one class, I'm glad to say, can never gain entrance here, their souls are so dirty I'm sure that they would demoralize hell in a year.

"I refer to that 'thing,' neither human nor beast—the carrion crew of the world—who never is happy unless he can feast on the wreck of an innocent girl. A million years in my warmest rooms his slanders would never atone, so I gave him a match and advised him to start a select little hell of his own."

With his fingers he lit an asbestos cigar and placing his book on a shelf he muttered, "I may be a very bad man but I've got some respect for myself."—Forth Worth Mail Telegram.

The Gospel of Saving.

In the Saturday Evening Post, Russell Sage presents some of the best advice that has ever been given to young men regarding the handling of their money. In the course of the article he says: "No matter how fast a man may make money, he owes it to society as well as to himself to be economical."

Any young man who will live up to the following set of rules will get more genuine happiness out of life than his neighbor who violates them: "Out of every dollar earned save 25 cents. Save 75 if you can, but never less than 25.

"Get up at a regular hour every morning, and work until the things before you are finished. Don't drop what you have in hand because it is 5 o'clock.

"Be honest; always have the courage to tell the truth.

"Don't depend on others. Even if you have a rich father, strike out for yourself.

"Cultivate independence at the very outset.

"Learn the value of money. Realize that it stands, when honestly made, as the monument to your value as a citizen.

"Be jealous of your civic rights. Take a wholesome interest in public affairs, but do not let politics, or anything else, interfere with the rigid administration of your private duties. The state is made up of individuals.

thing that you would be ashamed to discuss with your mother.

"Don't gamble. "Be circumspect in your amusements. "In connection with amusements, I have never been able to understand why the young men of today deem the theatre an absolute essential in seeking diversion. An evening with a good book is, or ought to be, more satisfying to the young man of brains than an evening in a hall where a lot of make-believe characters are strutting up and down the stage, like children at a masquerade. When the human race reaches its highest mental development there will probably be no theaters."

A "Fishy" Clackama Story.

Henry Himler, the pioneer fisherman who has been for so many years identified with the fishing business on the Clackama river, caught a very large Royal Chinook salmon Monday night while fishing in the Clackama river. Mr. Himler was pulling his net through the water when suddenly the boat refused to respond to the oars, and instead shot rapidly out into the middle of the stream; two men were in the boat but their united efforts to check the flight of the boat proved futile. The boat continued to act in this incalculable manner for several minutes before the fishermen could exercise any control over it, but at last it came to a standstill, and when the net was removed from the water a monstrous salmon was found tangled up in it. Mr. Himler weighed the salmon and its weight came to exactly 30 pounds. This is the largest salmon caught in many a day.—Oregon City Enterprise.

A Kansas exchange remarks: "A dude with narrow striped pants, colored shoes, a loud necktie, hair parted over the nose and smoking a cigarette, thus addressed the young lady whose society he craved: "If you were me what would you do?" Her reply came on the instant: "I would take off that hideous necktie, put that cigarette in the stove, part my hair on the side and pray God for more brains."

A Deep Mystery.

It is a mystery why women endure backache, headache, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, fainting and dizzy spells when thousands have proven that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Phoebe Cherley, of Peterson, Ia., "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters wholly cured me, and although 73 years old, I am now able to do my housework." It overcomes constipation, improves appetite, gives perfect health. Only 50c at C. F. Moore & Co.'s drugstore.

A Dying Man's Last Request.

"You are dying," said the doctor to the man on his death bed. "And do you really think I am going?" asked the man. "Yes, I know it," said the doctor. The dying man turned his head and looking at the lawyer who had come to make out his last will, said: "And do you think I am dying?" "Yes, I am sure," said the lawyer. The dying man then said to the doctor: "How much do I owe you?" "About $100," says the doctor. He had been in attendance only about three days. Then the dying man turned to the lawyer who had given about three hours attention to making of a will. "How much do I owe you?" "About $100," said the lawyer. "Well," said the dying man, "will both of you kneel on each side of my bed when I am dying?" "Why do you make such a request?" said the doctor and lawyer. "Well," said the dying man, "it will be a great satisfaction to me to die in the same manner that my savior did—between two thieves."—Tx.

Read This, Consumptives. "From the way my wife coughed for six months, I knew she had consumption. She showed it in her face, too, and her body wasted away to a mere skeleton. After she got down in bed the doctors couldn't do any good. I called in both Dr. F. A. Shannon and Dr. N. L. Hawson, each of whom is a first-class physician, but they had nothing that would reach the trouble in her lungs. My wife's father came to see her one day, when she got very low. He lives in Cedar Lake, Wis., while we live in Rice Lake, Wis. He said he knew what was needed, and made me get a bottle of Acker's English Remedy for Consumption. I went to Schmidt's, our local druggist, and got a bottle, and it helped her right away. She took eight more bottles, and they put her back on her feet and made her as sound and well as any woman in town. She has taken on flesh again, she doesn't cough, and if any one who doesn't know the facts was to be told she was so near death with consumption, he wouldn't believe it. My wife does all her housework, and at night sleeps as soundly as you please. Her stomach no longer gives her any trouble at all. Maybe you doubt what I am telling. If so, I advise you to see J. N. Schmidt, the druggist who sold me Acker's English Remedy for Consumption. He'll tell you the same thing. He says Acker's English Remedy is wonderful in all throat and lung troubles; that is a bottle come back to his store, although he has sold hundreds of them. My name is Arthur Bedell, Rice Lake, Wis."
