

THE NEWBERG GRAPHIC.

E. H. WOODWARD, EDITOR & PUBLISHER. W. C. WOODWARD, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING. FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 1902.

From the unusual boozing of the political bee this year, and from the number of stings in evidence, it's ascertained that the little pests have swarmed.

The agitation of the question "what to do with our Ex-Presidents" is all unnecessary. We have but one now and as springtime approaches give him a fishing rod and a tin can full of angle worms and the question will be settled for the next three months at least.

The Capital Journal advises the people to send men to the legislature who are crazy to get honors and office, as they will stand in for all the graft and increase their own salaries etc. The Journal will soon win the title of watchdog of Oregon's treasury.

The democrats smack their lips over a hot republican scrap such as is now in progress and prepare to hold the basket for falling plums. The Dalles Chronicle reminds them however that they had better not bank too heavily upon the results of such factional fights among Oregon republicans, who scrap like plumes before the convention but generally take their medicine like little men and swear it's good.

The anti-Geer people are basing their hopes on the fact that in the history of the state no republican governor has ever succeeded himself in the gubernatorial chair, nor has any republican governor ever received the honor of re-nomination at the hands of his party. Now is a good time to break the precedent. It certainly does not speak very well on the face for republican administration, that such a precedent exists. Governor Geer has given good service and if the question of his re-nomination were taken from the politicians and put in the hands of the people, it would be quickly answered in the affirmative.

In the last issue of the Oregon Agriculturist appeared an article on the strawberry industry, rather pessimistic in tone, and which rather tended to discourage its development in Western Oregon. Ordinarily the article would have had little significance here but the fact that much interest is now being awakened in this vicinity in strawberry culture, and that this place was referred to in the write-up in the Agriculturist, which has been copied, makes it plain that a word of warning was written for our benefit. Some of the advice given is undoubtedly good. The conditions of an industry should always be studied carefully before a plunge in its direction is made but the agriculturists here have faith that the people who have presented the subject of strawberries to them know what they were talking about. They at least spoke from their own experience. To assure those interested here that they are moving in the right direction and that there is a reason for the hope that is within them, Mr. Hofer, of Salem, writes them, through the Graphic, an encouraging letter, which appears in this issue.

NATIONAL CAPITAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Washington, D. C., March 20, 1902.

While Oregon letters have told, for two months past, of delightful weather, and for a month back of wild flowers in bloom, we have had phenomenal winter, with mixture of snow, rain, sleet and ice to diversify the climate, and colds all about. Today there is sunshine with freezing temperature and a north wind that attends strictly to business and makes the world disagreeable. There is an occasional day when sunshine encourages the buds to swell and flowers to peep; but these are sandwiched in few and far between. This is told to let your readers know what a good climate they have.

It is a far cry from Oregon to this city, but there are Oregonians enough here to break the monotony, and they occasionally make themselves apparent. Last week brought an invitation to attend an eloquent evening with Mrs. W. P. Williams, formerly Miss Ella Royal, of Salem. State wide made it necessary to turn out, so Mr. H. H. Giltry and myself attended, spending a most enjoyable evening. Mrs. Williams proved to be a very fine elocutionist; indeed recited far better than was expected, so the evening passed delightfully, especially as we met there Congressman Tongue and his daughter, also Col. Straight, of Eugene, and his daughter. Mr. Williams is a clerk in the General Land Office and Mrs. Williams is active in good works, this occasion being for some worthy object.

Winter here has various attractions besides theaters. Literary societies of for pleasant relief from routine of official life. Mr. Giltry and myself belong to the oldest Shakespearean club in Washington, whose meetings are always interesting. There are courses of lectures given by the National Geographical Society, covering subjects of recent investigation. As my forefathers risked life and property in the revolution the Sons of the American Revolution take me in and their monthly gatherings are enjoyable—especially those where ladies are invited. The state of Washington delegation seem to favor improving the navigation of the upper Columbia; there should be harmony of action between North Pacific states to lessen the time when products of the Inland Empire can have water transportation to the sea, so to lessen cost of carriage to producers. The River and Harbor bill has been reported to the House by that committee and a liberal sum will be appropriated for the Columbia river, for repair of the jetties at the entrance and other demands. While the sum unexpended for the boat railway at The Dalles is left for use on the canal and locks contemplated, no work will be done on that matter until the board of engineers shall have made report. Mr. Burton, chairman of the River and Harbor committee, made an elaborate speech on that bill to answer assertions that millions are to be wasted on insignificant streams at the demand of local politics. He showed that the total for small streams is insignificant; that the greater portion is for channels of commerce like the Columbia. Our democratic friends are trying hard to find points to make a campaign on in 1904, but have no capital piled up as Theodore Roosevelt is not, and he is not the only one who is not attending to business, and every day seems to add to his hold on the people. He would, no doubt, like to succeed himself as President, which is but natural; but the form of Mark Hanna looms up as a presidential possibility. Hanna stands before the world as a man who befriends labor; has done more than any other living American statesman to advocate labor interests. As he has often intervened to settle strikes and secure for labor its just rights, this will give him the labor vote at command, and his life is all consistent. There are 8000 men on his payroll at Cleveland, Ohio, and his men have never struck against him. Such a man deserves much and it is a pity that there are not more like him. Roosevelt is a different man, but his nature is as true and reliable. During his administration there will be no coming to politicians for support, for he is not that sort of man. The republicans are fortunate to have two such men to choose from; it looks as though one of them will be chosen as a presidential candidate. Washington is destined to be a magnificent city, if the nation's millions can make it so, but one has only to go a few blocks from the Capitol to find negro homes, or rickety wooden structures, side by side with new and fashionable residences. It is true that many new buildings are all the time going up; that eight to ten story apartment houses are rising in air, but these often shadow these same negro shacks that I tell of; and those same tumble-down edifices often cover ground of immense value, waiting for the buyer to come who will build largely. It will take half a century to eliminate these detrimental.

Speaking of Oregonians, we have here at present, Hon. Jeff Myers, formerly of Linn county, that has often represented in legislatures, but lately practicing law at Salem. It was like a healthy breeze to see him come in the other day, as he represents the cosmopolitan character of the West Coast, that is the most cosmopolitan portion of these United States. Jeff is on his wedding trip, that combines business that may detain him until June, as he has legal and other matters to look after in various sections. Mr. and Mrs. Myers had been in Charleston, taking in the exposition there, for a month before coming here. S. A. CLARKE.

GOOD OUTLOOK FOR THE STRAWBERRY INDUSTRY.

SALEM, OREGON.

Editor Graphic:— Allow me space in your paper to congratulate the people of your community on the enterprise in which they have taken hold of the proposition to establish the strawberry industry. They can, if they stay with it, make a second Hood River success of the business. For a year or more individual shipments have been made by growers at Salem to points as far as Seattle, Spokane and Sacramento, while, of course, the Portland market has always received a large supply of our surplus berries. But this year Salem will enter the larger markets with carload lots and become an active competitor with Hood River. Newberg is as favorably situated for the market in the northwest as Hood River, having both the river and railroad for shipments. If you establish a cannery you will be on a par with Salem and Hood River in all respects, except that Hood River is a day nearer certain markets like Salt Lake and Denver. But with a cannery to fall back upon there is no trouble in sight in disposing of the strawberry crop at profitable prices. There are 100 acres of strawberries and many acres of other fruit in the Salem Union and we are overrun with buyers and commission men.

I think the final result will be that Hood River, Salem and Newberg berries will be handled through one organization. We have a meeting Saturday, March 29, to consider a proposition from the manager of the Salem and Portland canneries to take all our berries that we can spare. We got three points for them last year, at the cannery and hope to do better this year. But we are going to pack our finest fruit in the most perfect manner possible and propose to make our reputation by putting up a first class article and go in for top prices. There will be berries on many days that will have to go to the cannery and we propose to make a reputation for the Salem canned berries. In fact there is already demand for four times as many as have ever been put up here. Last year we made a large crop of strawberries with not over two days of sunshine, proving that the most unfavorable season still leaves this a profitable crop. But you do not need to worry about a cannery until you have at least a hundred acres in strawberries. Your people can extend their acreage from now until July. Plants put out as late as the second week in July and as carefully cultivated as a corn crop would be in Iowa will bring twice to ten times as much as any corn crop next year.

There are some good suggestions in the Oregon Agriculturist about considering the difficulties in the way of marketing berries and whether they are to be sold to the cannery, the home market, or for shipping. Towns within fifty to one hundred miles of Portland can get the benefit of all three markets if they will plant good canning varieties. The cannery, the home market and the shipping market are open to the grower if he will grow berries for color and solid shipping qualities. There are enough such kinds that he need not plant or grow the larger, softer and lighter colored berries which are only saleable in the home market, and often not there, when berries with flavor, acidity and rich red color all through are offered. The large berries that are white inside, and more or less soft flesh, cannot be used at the cannery. They cannot be shipped in any distance. So the grower is safe in selecting round or oval berries that have color and tart enough to can. They will be found solid enough to ship, and it is the family demand in cities for berries to can for home use that is the greatest market after all. The agriculturist editor is too pessimistic in heaping up obstacles, when it is an established fact that Hood River and Salem cannot grow enough. If Newberg people will put out a good acreage of strawberries this year, in the summer of 1903 they will be shipping thousands of crates daily to Portland for distribution there. The following year they will have a cannery offered them, especially if they put out other berries like the raspberries and blackberries. But they cannot expect to establish a reputation as a berry shipping center in less than three years. Salem is now where Hood River was five years ago, and while Salem growers know that they can grow from three to five varieties that they can put into markets within five hundred miles and make good money at it, Salem growers have not yet found the shipping berry that will make them the reputation, or that there is none to compare with it in color, firmness and rich strawberry flavor. Twenty thousand plants are being distributed and in a few years it may be both the shipping and canning berry of this section, and it may not. Hood River has not half the reputation it will have in a few years. Newberg has yet to make a reputation and yet everything is in favor of Newberg as a shipping point. S. HORN.

Editor Graphic:— Could the voters of Yamhill county answer the following questions and oblige a reader of your paper? First—Is it just and right that a citizen of the United States should have to go 18 or 20 miles to the county seat with his witness to register so he can get to vote? Second—"A" has his naturalization papers but he has to have his witnesses to register. "B" fought in the civil war but he has to go through the same process if he wants to be a citizen. Is it right? Third—Why could not the assessor register the citizens as he goes around from house to house and save the taxpayers time and money and lots of trouble and expense? In the first place they do not take a person's oath, so he has to have his witnesses to swear that he is telling the truth. Is the American getting on a level with the Chinaman, or is it a money making scheme? Resp. Leo SCHURR.
