CHAPTER I.—Continued.

"Ah," he said to me, "so you've come to try and enlighten our Hottentots about a thing or two in this world and the next. Well, you can only do your best, you know; we'll try to make you comfortable and back you up. Come all the way from London today, I suppose;—have you got yourself fixed up yet in the village?—what some author chap—Matthew or Mark Summat or other—calls a 'Lancashire Hell-hole.' Well, we're not quite so bad as that yet here, but we're getting to be. But it can't be helped, you know; we had gone forward and we run go forward, as the rabbit said when he let th' weasel get him into a hole. Yes, 'Hell-hole,' but it should be a useful change for you; it may give you an idea when you want to describe to your congregation the real—"

"Jim, lad," interrupted his sister, "you're forgetting yourself!"

"Oh?—ah, well I can remember, you know, when all round about here was as sweet and pretty a place—'tis torn back o' th' White Moss' (indicating that locality over his shoulder), 'Topperton way.'"

Thus the full, quiet and careless stream of his talk flowed on, meandering about one person and another, this subject and that. He seemed a well of curious and fearsome Lancashire lore—lore of the days when spinning and weaving were done in the cottage homes of remote hamlets and homesteads, when Lancashire energy applied itself to useful work and not to useless toil, when its fabrics were made to be worn and not merely to be sold—the days when the steam engine was not yet with its all-devouring, all-enveloping machinery.

We had talked thus for about an hour—or, rather, listened to Mr. Birley talk—when he paused and looked round (he had been fidgeting in his chair for some time).

"What's got 'Mamie'?" he said, addressing his sister. "Is he stuck till midnight in his laboratory again? Doesn't seem as if that smoke was to come off tonight. In Paul's house now it used to be 'Smoke where you please'—drawing room or anywhere. Poor Paul!"

I was astonished and alarmed to see Miss Lacroix rise hurriedly, and glide without a word from the room. Mrs. Steinhardt made as if she would follow her, but she did not. She sank back in her chair with a sigh.

"Jim! Jim!" she exclaimed, reproachfully. "Why will you say things, when you know the poor girl cannot bear allusions to it?"

"Ah," said Birley, humbly. "Poor lass!—her father," he explained, turning to me, "has never come back from London. Poor Paul!" He was visibly affected.

"He had to go to the law courts there," said Mrs. Steinhardt, "more than a year ago, about some dreadful business of the chemical works—he was my husband's partner."

"Hildersheimer v. Lacroix and Steinhardt"—(Frank turned on the music stool to correct his uncle's pronunciation.) "Well," said he, "that's all right; anyway that was the case. May be—turning again to me—"you remember it in the papers. It was about the infringement of a chemical patent 'Mamie' had put them up to in his lateral laboratory."

"Nay, uncle," interrupted Frank, flushing up. "It wasn't father's fault more than anyone else's."

"Ay, lad," said Birley, "of course you know all about it. But you're right to stand up for your father. However, Paul, as the chief of the firm, went up to London to fight the case; he fought and lost to the tune of 20,000 pounds damages—which, I suppose, drove him mad, poor fellow, for he's never come back—made away with himself, very likely, or, somehow, got made away with."

"But, surely," interrupted Frank again, "it could hardly be the damages did it, uncle? You remember he went to Paris after the trial about some pattern business for the print works, and then got back to London again."

"Ay, lad—out 20,000 pounds damages can make a man feel very queer all the way to Paris and back. At any rate, poor Paul's gone—lost in the great London wilderness."

"It is a very extraordinary affair," said I. "But I don't remember seeing anything of it in the papers."

"It got into the papers, though," said Birley, "to some extent—not much. We didn't want a noise about a private, painful thing like that."

"But," said I, wondering, "I suppose inquiries were made?"

"They made inquiries high and low," said Birley; "they laid detectives on, and everything, but nothing came of it. Did there, Frank?"

"No," said Frank—"nothing at all."

"Did you try to trace him out of London?" I asked. "I suppose they did," said Birley.

"Yes—oh yes," said Frank. "I wondered that Birley should keep using the word 'they.' Had he borne no share in the investigation himself? I had my thought answered at once."

"I wasn't able to go to London myself," said Birley; "I was laid up with a broken leg; and, when I got better, I didn't think it was any use my going. There was an end of Paul—that was certain; for he wasn't the man to knock under like, and get lost just."

In a little while Miss Lacroix returned, with apology for her withdrawal.

"I had a little headache," said she.

BY J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

I now saw more clearly the encroachments which grief, and what I cannot describe by other words than "anxious waiting," had made on a young life which would, unoppressed, I was sure, have been so full of spirit and mirth. I longed there and then with an earnest desire that I might do something to brighten her life, to remove the weight of uncertainty and grief which burdened it, and preyed upon it.

But I had little further opportunity for talk with her that night. In a few minutes Mr. Steinhardt returned. We heard then what were the casualties resulting from the falling of the bell tower. A horse had been killed, as also, had been a sow with her litter; and two pigs had been so injured that the butcher had to be summoned. We were now invited into the smoking room; but Mr. Birley rose, and said he must be going; he would smoke his pipe on the way home—"wi' th' parson."

"Parson smokes, I suppose," said he, laying his hand on my shoulder.

So he and I departed together. The valley was asleep under a white pall of fog; but the weird tongues of flame still flickered on the slope and ridge behind and beyond us (from coke ovens, my companion explained), and the tall chimneys dreamily and intermittently smoked. The great chimney of the chemical works, however, emitted not so much smoke as a thin pinkish vapor, which stole away imperceptibly over the neighborhood to poison all green things, and to filter through the cracks and crevices of doors and windows, to trouble sleepers with lethargy and headache.

"By George!" exclaimed my companion. "He'll get fined again some day. Paul used to be always at him about it. Poor Paul!"

So ended my first evening in Timperley—a memorable evening for me. I had made the acquaintance of one whom I have reason now to call as dear a friend as I have ever known, and as good a man as fortune has ever neglected, and of another who is now the dearest of all earth's creatures to me.

CHAPTER II.

I frequently looked in upon the ladies at Timperley Hall, and took a four-o'clock cup of tea with them (not, however, to the neglect of other, if less pleasant, parochial visitations). During these visits we talked without that constraint which somehow Mr. Steinhardt's presence imposed upon us. Miss Lacroix and I agreed in our opinions concerning the ruthlessness with which Lancashire pushed on its industrial way: we often astonished poor Mrs. Steinhardt (sometimes even ourselves) by the warmth with which we would discuss the outrage done to man and nature.

One afternoon we talked thus. It was well on in springtime; the stream was running full and all nature, in spite of drawbacks, was striving to look green. I told them how that morning I had stood by the little plank bridge just below Timperley Hall, looking across at the dreadfully lumbered little peninsula on which the ruined spinning mill stood, when there turned up at my elbow an old man whom I knew by sight as an ex-handloom weaver.

"A fine brook, that, parson," he said.

"Yes," said I, suiting my reply to what I thought his persuasion; "what a pity it's not more known to you!"

"Ah, but," said he, sadly, "there were none in it worth; though there's been none for many a day. Trout! Aw delfy intention to live in that, but gettin' cured first, like a red herring or a sallymander! There was a lad drowned like as it might be this spring, and he were never found till like as it might be next back end, down there in that mud; he were not gone at all, but he were cussed 'thru' and thro'; black, mon—black!"

This I told; and then I continued: "Drowning, they say, is an easy death; but to drown in such a stream as that seems horribly repulsive. I fancy no one would care to commit suicide in it."

I perceived my stupid blunder as soon as I had spoken; I had not thought that what I said could be taken as "allusive" to the disappearance of Mr. Lacroix.

"Excuse me," said Miss Lacroix, rising hurriedly, "I do not feel very well. Do not come, Mrs. Steinhardt; I shall get better by myself."

I of course made apology to Mrs. Steinhardt for my stupidity.

"Yes," said she; "you see she can't bear any kind of allusion to her father's end. She told me soon after she came here (she couldn't you know go on living in that big house up there all by herself)—she told me a strange dream she had once or twice when her father was missing—the strangest thing, but I scolded her so, she has never said another word to me about it. Still I fancy she thinks a great deal about her father, though she does not say much; they were rare and fond of one another."

That very evening I unexpectedly learned from Miss Lacroix herself what that strange dream was. I was returning by moonlight from the house of a parishioner along that same road which first brought me upon the valley. Passing the pond on my right (which I before mentioned as reflecting the lighted windows of the many storeyed mill), I observed a figure, cloaked and hooded, standing on the margin of the pond under one of the trees. I paused a minute, while my heart beat with apprehension, and then I passed through a gap in the fence and approached. The figure turned quickly, as if im-

Worth of a Compliment.

Most compliments sound something like this: "They say he is a thief, but he never stole anything from me. It may be because I have watched him closely, but so far I have never missed anything." When you feel that your friend deserves praise, why pay tribute to his enemies in praising him?

So Stupid.

"I believe," said the other, "his name is Jenks—Henry Jenks."

"Oh! to be sure. How stupid of me! He was my first husband."

STANDS GAVE WAY.

Five Spectators Killed and Many Injured at a Football Game at Glasgow.

Glasgow, April 8.—The struggle of the crowds which gathered at Ibrox park today to witness the last international association football contest between teams from England and Scotland caused the collapse of a portion of the spectators' terraces, resulting in the death of five persons and the injury of 125.

When the game begun 70,000 spectators were on the ground and an immense crowd had gathered outside. Being unable to gain admittance, the crowd broke down some of the barriers and swarmed upon the field, whereupon the police charged and drove the intruders upon the terraces and seats, with the result that the railings dividing the crowds were broken and the people were thrown over each other.

In the frantic struggle toward the exits the pressure toward the upper portion of the westerly terrace was so great that 100 feet of the highest of the structure collapsed under the weight of the crowd driven upon it, precipitating the mass of people to the ground, 60 feet below. The injured were piled in heaps, wedged in with broken wood.

The onlookers hesitated to approach the dangling structure at first, but finally began to utilize portions of the broken barriers as stretchers. A hundred of the most seriously injured were carried to the pavilion and to spaces in the rear of the stands. A majority of the victims are suffering from broken ribs and fractured limbs, while some sustained internal injuries. Those most severely injured were later removed in ambulances to infirmaries, and the lesser sufferers were sent in cabs to surgeries. Six of the injured are not likely to recover. A few persons were trampled upon in trying to escape from the crush when the police charged, but most of the victims sustained their injuries in the fall of the terrace.

THE DANISH TREATY.

Landsting Continues the Debate Without Reaching Conclusions.

Copenhagen, April 8.—The Landsting, or upper house, in secret session today continued the discussion of the Danish West Indies treaty for three hours with no result. The debate was heated, and much excitement prevailed among the members. It is hoped that the meeting of the landsting tomorrow will enable the house to report its conclusions.

A meeting of the members of the opposition in the landsting was held to night and an exciting debate occurred. A majority of those present declared themselves in favor of the sale of the islands to the United States, if the consent of the inhabitants of the islands is obtained.

ANOTHER ROYAL GUEST.

The Prince of Wales May be Next to Visit the United States.

New York, April 8.—High diplomatic circles here are discussing plans, believed to be far advanced, for a visit by the Prince of Wales to the United States, says the London correspondent of the Times. The administration at Washington is officially forwarding the proposal for the visit, which, it is understood, receives the personal sanction of King Edward, some of whose counselors urge the acceptance of the invitation as a matter of astute state policy. Emperor William is considering an invitation to send the crown prince of Germany to America at the same time, and France is expected to send a distinguished representative.

LEFT TO EDUCATION.

Cecil Rhodes' Fortune Will Found a Large Number of Scholarships.

London, April 7.—The will of Cecil Rhodes provides for the establishment of colonial scholarships and two American scholarships to each of the present states and territories of the United States. The will of Mr. Rhodes also provides for five scholarships for students of German birth at Oxford, to be nominated by Emperor William, and commenting on the bequest, Mr. Rhodes, in a codicil telegraphed from South Africa, said:

"For a good understanding between England, Germany and the United States will secure the peace of the world, and educational relations form the strongest ties."

Mr. Rhodes' will is a remarkable and voluminous document of more than 3,500 words. Even this is not the entire will, as the executors only gave out the portions which they consider to be of public interest. It was executed in 1899. There is a codicil attached on the day of the deceased's last departure from England, and another cabled from Cape Town, which leaves 4,000 pounds yearly to keep up the spot in the Matopos hills where his remains are to be buried. The will further directs that a railroad extension be made into the Matopos hills, so that visitors may go there at the week end to inspect the "majesty and glory of their surroundings."

Mr. Rhodes explicitly says he is to be buried in an aperture cut in the solid rock, surrounded by a brass tablet bearing the words: "Here lie the remains of Cecil John Rhodes." No one else is to be buried there who has not deserved well of his country.

Mr. Rhodes bequeaths all his landed property near Bulawayo and Salisbury, both in Matabeleland, to trustees, whom he directs to cultivate the land for the instruction of the people of Rhodesia. His celebrated country place at Groot-Schur, not far from Cape Town, Mr. Rhodes leaves as a residence for the "Prime minister of the federal government of South Africa," with 1,000 pounds yearly for its maintenance.

THE BALKAN SITUATION.

Organized Rebellion Among the Serbian Inhabitants of Northern Turkey.

London, April 5.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company, from Sofia, says:

It is reported that 14 revolutionary bands crossed the frontier into Macedonia during the past few days. They were well armed and provisioned.

A party of Turks recently ambushed 300 Bulgarian outlaws in the mountains of Kirin, killing several of the band and capturing the remainder.

The Macedonians are accused of horrible atrocities, of which it is hard to obtain confirmation. It is reported that they skinned one Turk alive and stuffed the skin and carried it about as a trophy.

SERBIANS AGAIN UP IN ARMS.

Vienna, April 5.—The New Free Presse reports a serious and organized rebellion among the Serbian inhabitants of the northern villages of Turkey. The insurgents are known as the old Serbian rebels. They are well armed and well supplied with ammunition. A sanguinary encounter has occurred between them and the Albanians at Kolashin. Encounters have been reported from other places, concludes the paper, in which several men were killed or wounded.

Fire Burned for Twenty Years.

Carbon, Wyo., April 5.—The fire that has been smouldering in the old No. 2 coal mine of the Union Pacific here has broken out afresh, and a force of men is now engaged in walling up the mouth of the fan shaft, through which the smoke and flames are issuing. About 20 years ago a fire started in No. 2, and, being unable to get control of it, the company walked up the shaft. At intervals of two or three years the fire has broken out in new places, and for five consecutive years it burned steadily. The fire has undermined the country for a radius of half a mile.

ANTI-ANARCHIST BILL.

Albany, N. Y., April 5.—A bill designed to stamp out anarchy in this state was signed by Governor Odell during the day. It imposes a penalty of not more than 10 years' imprisonment or more than $5,000 fine, or both, on persons who advocate anarchistic doctrines by speech, writings or otherwise.

BARBED WIRE BOUNDARY.

Great Falls, Mont., April 7.—Word has reached this city to the effect that the Canadian government has appropriated $10,000 to build a barbed wire fence along the boundary between Montana and the Dominion, extending from St. Mary's lake to the Sweet Grass hills.

CABINET TAKES IT UP.

Washington, April 7.—The time of the cabinet today was taken up almost entirely with a communication which the president has received from the governor of Louisiana, protesting against the camp alleged to be maintained in that state by agents of the British government for the purpose of supplying mules and teams to the British army in South Africa. The president has directed an investigation into the facts and the law bearing upon the question.
