

THE NEWBERG GRAPHIC.

E. H. WOODWARD, EDITOR & PUBLISHER. W. C. WOODWARD, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Entered as second-class matter at the postoffice at Newberg, Oregon.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING.

FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1902.

Tracy should be satisfied now and give himself up. He has got into the editorial columns of the New York papers.

Seattle is making a scoop on free East, advertising off of Oregon's escaped convict. However, all things considered, the value of the advertisement is somewhat questionable.

It is claimed that 15,380 bills were introduced during the late session of congress. The American people evidently have unflinching faith in the saving power of legislation.

Here's good news to the ill-used canines. A St. Louis judge has decided that a dog has a perfect right to bite a boy who is trying a tin can to his tail. The harder he bites the better.

Sir Thomas Lipton has made the public announcement that he will make another effort next year to secure the America's challenge cup. The news is hailed with delight over here, "for he's a jolly good fellow."

A census bulletin on "Needles and Pins," just published, vouches for the interesting fact that upward of 816,000-000 dozens of pins are made and used in the United States every year. Those on calculation bent might tell us what becomes of them.

"Tips are degrading both to the givers and receivers and the whole system of tipping is unsound and inexcusable." To the tourist with scantily filled purse who seeks an occasional accommodation from a lordly porter the above words from the New York Tribune will come as though inspired.

A prominent club woman of Boston says she is simply paralyzed by what she sees and knows of the great use of intoxicating liquors and cigarettes by young women. In her opinion, fathers and mothers are to blame largely as half the time they have no idea what their children are doing, where they are doing it, and who is helping them to do it.

Now that the smoke of conflict is lifting after the close of the session of congress, the usual cry is going up from the usual sources against the lavish expenditures in appropriations and the stock bugaboo of "a billion dollar congress" is recited. Let it be remembered that Tom Reed once sentimentally remarked that this is a billion dollar country and he hoped soon to see it a two billion dollar one. Our legislators have been cutting the cloth according to their pattern.

Dr. Arthur J. Brown, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, after a long visit to the Philippines, gives unqualified approval to the American policy there, as he says, "Aginaldo's government would have been as bloody as that of the Sultan of Turkey" and that "if Washington had been president at the end of the nineteenth century he would have done what the equally wise, patriotic and Christian William McKinley did." Little anti-imperialism sentiment here.

The brute in man comes to the surface very readily upon occasion. Men from all parts of the United States are flocking to San Francisco to witness the Jeffries Fitzsimmons fight. Proof of the interest awakened by the conflict is furnished in the statement that tickets representing $13,000 had been sold with two days yet to hear from. The human bulldogs are devoting themselves to their muscle, and each is boastful of his belief that he will be victorious over his opponent. The world would be the gainer if each were to disable the other permanently. Beyond this, public decency has little to desire in the outcome of this or any prizefight.—Oregonian.

All the old Indian war veterans have an especially warm place in their hearts for Congressman Tongue and those of Washington County, irrespective of party affiliations, have manifested their gratitude by passing a resolution endorsing him for our next United States Senator. Mr. Tongue replies that while he appreciates their expression of trust, his fidelity to friends who are candidates for senator, and his gratitude and loyalty to the voters of the first congressional district, for whose interests he is responsible, make it impossible that he should be a candidate for senatorial honors. Mr. Tongue has more than proven his ability as a national legislator, and the people recognize in him the qualities which they wish to see embodied in Oregon's new Senator. However, they appreciate his position and honor him the more for the stand he takes. He is the kind of a man they delight to honor, and if not now, it is probable that the people will yet see their desire in this respect accomplished.

While our strenuous president, who has sworn enmity to the trusts, is girding himself to go out and fight the giants, it is at least diverting to consider the different attitudes toward his policy as assumed. Richardson, the democratic leader of the lower house of congress, declares that President Roosevelt is insincere, is talking for effect, does not mean what he says, and does not intend to bother the trusts. On the other hand, the trust magnates are becoming sufficiently alarmed, that evidences are multiplying that they will wage a bitter war against the re-election of the courageous president, whom they do not take at Richardson's estimate. The fact is the democrats are fearful that a republican president will do something against the trusts, and steal their only campaign thunder. Meanwhile the people are back of Roosevelt, and believe that he is preparing for the fight of his life in the spirit of the old challenge, "Lay on Macduff, and damned be he who first cries, 'It is enough.'"

Every now and then some one is heard to complain that the books and magazines of the day are so trivial that they are beneath the notice of the truly intellectual, but there is reason to suspect that these dissatisfied ones fail to look in the right direction for the literary pabulum that they profess to desire. For there are magazines and magazines, books frivolous and books serious. There, for example, is the recondite and rather awful Chicago periodical, The Open Court, whose editor discourses casually of "The Christa" and "The Labarum," and, when in lighter mood, tells a story of Buddhist metaphysics. In its columns, too, are reviews of books which get no attention whatever from the light-minded daily press. In the current issue, to be explicit, are mentioned "The Anuruddha Cataka," by Anuruddha Maha Thero, of Buddharakkhito; "The Vidagdha Mukha Madana," a Sanskrit poem by Sri Dnamadaso of Kannul; "The Uda, or Solemn Utterance of the Buddha;" Kaschayana's "Pali Grammar," and "Gandrischen einer Geschichte der Naturwissenschaften, zugleich eine Ecksufahrung in das Studium der Grundlegenden Naturwissenschaftlichen Literature," by Von Dr. Friedrich Dannemann. Thus it may be seen that the people who really want solid reading may have it if they will direct their attention to the proper quarter.—Indianapolis Journal.

It is the weakness of the republican form of government and has often been its ruin in the past, that selfish and unprincipled men put petty strife and jealousy and personal interest, above the welfare of the state. The fact is, to a greater or less degree even unrecognized, in himself, well nigh every man looks at the public interests through glasses colored with his own prejudices. This cannot be helped, absolutely, but the honest and conscientious citizen will endeavor to minimize as much as possible the force of the personal equation. Events arise at times however which bring the question home as to which class of citizens is really in the majority. Such an event is found in the attempt of the Wisconsin politicians to defeat United States Senator Spooner, one of the ablest men in congress, for re-election. It seems to matter not to the two by four statesmen of Wisconsin that they are represented by one of the brightest men in the senate in a way that does credit not only to their state but to their Nation. It matters not to them that Senator Spooner has grappled with questions of national import in a way that has given him a front rank as a statesman, and that his trained services may be needed in the future. These considerations are as nothing beside the fact that their senator is not the sort of truckling politician who can keep a good stand in with his petty politician constituents. Wisconsin might well read a lesson from Oregon which a few years ago did just what it looks probable that Wisconsin will do. Oregon thereby lost prestige which it has been hard to regain. Wisconsin should reconsider.

LANDS FOR THE LANDLESS.

In providing for the free distribution of public land in fee among the Filipinos as is done in the new civil government bill, the republican party is true to one of its earliest and best policies says an Eastern exchange. The establishment of the homestead policy is due to the republican party, the first law on this subject having been passed in 1862. "Homes for Homeless" was one of the early campaign mottoes of the republican party. James Buchanan, the last democratic president before the war, vetoed a homestead bill passed in 1830 in a message of great length, in which he enumerated ten distinct reasons against it, one of them being that "it would demoralize the people and repress the noble spirit of independence." The next congress passed a bill which was signed by Abraham Lincoln, and which proved to be one of the most beneficent measures ever enacted. It opened to immediate settlement millions of acres of the public domain which would have otherwise remained a wilderness for years, and drew to America millions of wealth producing citizens who, without the attraction of free land, would never have emigrated from other countries. The principle of the homestead law is to be introduced into the Philippines. During Spanish rule in the islands nearly all the land was owned either by the government, the Catholic church or the friars. The people might have land for occupation and cultivation, but they could not own it. Practically there was no ownership in fee. The system of most burdensome and odious to the natives, and was one of their greatest sources of complaint against the Spaniards. Natives who had cultivated the lands for generations were mere squatters. The new civil government act provides for the survey, settlement and entry of the public lands and for the opening and development of mines and forests and for the purchase of the friar and church lands, and disposing of them in forty acre farms at cost to the natives who now occupy them, and giving them a title in fee thereto. The act further provides that the natives may secure from the public lands, without cost, title in fee to the extent of forty acres in each case of the lands they occupied and tilled before the United States came in possession of the country. Forty acres of that soil in that climate makes a good ample farm. This free distribution of land in fee among the natives, enabling a family to secure a home of its own with a title in fee, something hitherto unknown to them, will go far toward making the people happy, contented and law-abiding. The sense of land ownership begets a love of peace and a taste for law and order, and with a good system of public schools and improved means of communication the people will be in a position to become prosperous and fitted for local self-government. The homestead policy of the republican party, which has been of untold benefit in this country, will undoubtedly produce beneficial results in our new island possessions. "Lands for the landless" is as good a policy in the Philippines as it is in the United States.

The Curse of Lionization.

Next to filling pages about the heroic exploits of such characters as Tracy and Merrill, says the Capital Journal, the press does a great injury by printing inordinate praise and fulsome flattery of young people who have done something.

A young boy or girl swelled up with newspaper flattery seldom gets reduced to dimensions of utility. Why, a grown-up can hardly stand newspaper mention of that kind that goes with printing their picture.

When such a boy or girl has the wind let out of their inflated dimensions by the rude pin-prick of experience, they collapse and think this world unjust, and a measly old fraud, and never have any snap afterwards.

Keep your boys and girls down on a level of solid old mother earth, and don't get them soaring in the heavens of vanity too early in life, for when they fall and realize that the puffing was all wind—they will fall very flat.

The advertising of little children in short clothes as graduates and printing their names in full, with their middle names, is a piece of gimcrack lionization that spoils the most of them forever afterwards.

Honest work and modestly taking a part in life without premature advertising leaves a footing for greater achievements and a chance to get the youngsters over jacksaw bridge without losing his wits entirely. Parents pray to have your children spared from a reputation for precociousness.

Some people carry a chip around on their shoulders all the time, and as a consequence they are continually in hot water. What's the use in trying to pick a slight out of every little, in essence a trifling thing, which a fair minded view would fall to observe? No sense in it whatever. The persons who indulge in such a thing are simply making themselves miserable at their own expense, and gradually working themselves to such a state that they lose all faith in mankind; they wreck themselves socially, weaken themselves spiritually and intellectually. Brace up. Have a broader conception of people and things. Try to look at matters as they are not as they appear. You cannot afford to destroy your own satisfaction and comfort in life in that manner. Get yourself right. There are too many people in this world for you to imagine that folks ought to humor every little whim of yours. It's extreme foolishness for you to think so. Straighten up. Get the kinks out of your back and keep them out. Then may be it won't be so ready to bow up at every little imaginary offense that comes along.—Ex.
