Sam Atkinson left his spirited team untied once too often. He left the horses standing in front of the postoffice Monday morning when they lit out and tried their speeding qualities down First street, upsetting the wagon in the region of the creamery. It is not known that Samuel cried over spilt milk, or cream, but he didn't have much churning to do that day.

Two or three citizens of Newberg have been laboring assidgously with the Southern Pacific Company to get the old schedule put in force again, claiming that the great majority of people are dissatisfied with the present time card. The Graphic has heard little or no complaint and does not see but what the new schedule is giving very general satisfaction.

The union gospel meetings which have been held by Dr. Wm. Randall of Portland, came to a close Sunday night at the Friends church. Though in some ways the meetings did not accomplish what had been hoped, there were still some very good results. Appreciative words of the able manner in which the meetings were conducted by Dr. Randall are heard on every hand. He has many friends in Newberg.

When the College basket ball team went up to Corvallis last Friday the boys found the field so much larger than they were accustomed to playing on that they were placed at a great disadvantage; so much so that they could scarcely use their old plays at all, and were defeated by the score of 25 to 5. They believe they can defeat Corvallis on their home field. Aubrey Kramien, the crack center was unable to play on account of a weak ankle, Owen Marris taking his place. Kramien is expected to in the game at Monmouth, however, this Friday evening.

John Stratton narrowly escaped serious if not fatal injury from a maddened horse at Grame's livery barn last Friday afternoon. He went into the stall without speaking, to harness the animal, when it suddenly began to rear and strike viciously at him, almost getting him down and under foot in the stall. John managed to get up in the manger, where the infuriated animal tried to follow him, biting and striking all the time. The horse struck him once on the arm, near the shoulder, throwing it out of place. Dr. Clocchek was hastily called and put the injured member back in position.

J. B. Christner of Whiteson, while plowing on F. M. Glover's place recently, unearthed a silver-plated pistol of five barrels, which had been buried any where from 25 to 40 years. The wood from the handle had all rotted away and the barrel was deeply indented with rust, while the magazine and hammer were solidly locked together and the trigger had rusted away. The silver-plating on the handle was bright and unimpaired. The initials "L. M." were scratched on this part of it. Mr. Christner thinks it may have been used in the early history of the country in fighting Indians.—Reporter.

Hervey Hoskins has written his folks of his visit to Washington, D. C. during the holidays, and spoke particularly of the kindness and courtesy of Congressman Tongue who personally showed him the points of interest over the city. The letter was written before Mr. Tongue's death. Hervey will always have an especially bright remembrance of Oregon's honored congressman.

Fred Mitchell, brother of Pearly Mitchell, who has had the position of motorman in Portland for several months, attempted suicide Saturday by shooting himself in his room in a hotel. No motive can be ascribed for the deed and when asked by an officer why he did it, he promptly told that worthy that it was none of his business and for him to tend to his own troubles. He did pretty serious execution with his gun, but it is thought that he will probably recover.

Is it Worth Agitating?

Just now the people of this county are uniting in the effort to induce the Southern Pacific Company to extend its road from LaFayette and connect McMinnville with the Yamhill division, thus putting this part of the county in closer touch with the county seat. This is a progressive move which it is sincerely hoped can be carried to a successful conclusion.

One good turn deserves another, and this prospective improvement, calls loudly for another, which is worth agitating with determination and confidence. Some may say one thing at a time, but Mrs. Means' motto, "Git a plenty while you're gittin, sez I," is a pretty good one after all, and if the railroad company is in the mood to grant the first, it is just as apt, and probably more so, to grant the second at the same time, as if the people let the matter drop now, and attempt to arouse an agitation later on. And now, too, the people are interested, and that's the time to do business. But to the "long felt want."—

This part of the country needs another daily train—an evening train to Portland and a morning train out. We need it badly and have long needed it. People have long sighed for the extra service, have talked about it, and are talking about it now, but have not had the temerity to ask for it.

As it is now residents of this portion of the valley cannot be in Portland of an evening, without being away from home the better part of two days. As a result they don't go very often. In some ways it may be a good thing for the people, but it is difficult so to convince Eastern people, who have always been accustomed to metropolitan advantages, and who are out here looking for homes. It is a "hard proposition" that citizens living within so few miles of Portland, can enjoy none of its educational advantages, except at such great cost of time. For instance, speakers and lecturers of national importance, Henry Wattersons and Booker T. Washingtons, give an evening to a Portland audience. Some noted musical organization, a prima donna, or some famed artist of the stage, visits our metropolis, and however they may wish it, it is almost impossible for our people to benefit thereby.

If a business man has a little more than he can attend to in one short day, and needs a few more hours, he is compelled to make it two days. If one wishes to make connections with trains out of Portland, it is frequently the case that he must go down in the morning of the day previous.

But it is not worth while to discuss at length the practical demand for a better service. It is so evident that discussion becomes an act of supererogation. The thing to do is for the people to unite and stir things toward the desired end.

The company will probably offer the objection that there is not enough patronage to justify another train. Nor will there ever be until the train is put on. The other train will help to make patronage. To people who are coming from the East and settling in Oregon, the question of good transportation facilities, is one which they give careful consideration. Many coming from communities where they had splendid advantages of inter-urban electric lines, they will reflect seriously before locating where it is with such difficulty that they can come in touch with metropolitan advantages. Better train service will materially assist in building up this country and no institution will profit thereby more than the railroad company. This is one of the good rules that work admirably both ways.

The Southern Pacific can well afford to give us the service desired. This part of the valley is bound to grow and if satisfactory transportation facilities can't be secured from the railroad company, the people will begin to look elsewhere for them. They must be secured sooner or later. But the company, by manifesting a willingness to satisfy the wants of the patrons of the road, can hold the business, and profit, with the people. And right now our wants are, an extension of the road to McMinnville and another daily train.

A friend hands in the following, the moral of which he thinks has an application elsewere than Fort Dodge: "Down at Fort Dodge," says the Britt Tribune, "they have so many woman's clubs that the babies have to be born at night in order to find their mothers at home." Rather tough on the babies is'nt it.
