

Big Poultry Show Next.

A quality show—that is what the Lewis and Clark poultry show will be. The show opens on October 5th and will continue until the 12th, inclusive. There are 1000 birds entered, and every one of these is worthy a prize.

A majority of the entries are from western states, as prohibitive express rates spoiled plans for heavy entries from some eastern states. There are, however, a few eastern entries, and the birds exhibited by western fanciers will be a great surprise to visitors from the east.

Pierce County, Washington, leads off as the largest exhibitor with a total of 235 entries. Of these, W. R. Seers will exhibit 35 white Plymouth Rocks, and Fred A. Johnson 47 birds representing nine varieties. George L. Story, of Oregon City, Oregon, has the largest entry, his birds numbering 56 and representing 16 varieties. The largest exhibit of one variety will be that of the Hazelwood Farm Company of Spokane, which has entered 50 white Plymouth Rocks.

The judges for the show are all experts, the best men procurable. The list follows: George D. Holden, president of the American Poultry Association; Theodore Hughes, of Indianapolis; R. C. H. Hallock, of St. Louis, secretary of the National White Wyandotte Club; W. W. Browning, of Ogden, Utah, president of the Utah Poultry Association; C. H. Hinds, Alameda, California; H. H. Collier, Tacoma, Washington; E. J. Ladd, Portland, and Thomas Wilkinson, British Columbia.

Peach Notes From the Oregon Agriculturist.

Dr. W. C. Hawk, of Jefferson, Oregon, realized $600 this season from the sale of peaches from a two-acre orchard.

G. M. LaFollette has a young peach orchard of one acre which only began to bear last year. This year the crop from the one acre amounted to 2000 boxes and Mr. LaFollette cleared above expenses on that one acre $950. The orchard is near Salem.

Visitors to previous World's Fairs in the United States have been surprised at the great size of peaches from Max Pracht's Peachblow Paradise Orchard, Ashland, Oregon. This year, however, this orchard has outdone all previous records. The Oregon state exhibit September 12th, received from the Pracht Peachblow Paradise Orchard a box of peaches so large that ten filled a standard peach box. One peach measured fifteen inches in circumference and weighed 26 ounces.

Peach orchards in the Willamette Valley have paid so well this year that there may be a tendency to overdo the planting.

In specially favored localities in the Willamette Valley the peach has averaged one of the most profitable fruits for a number of years and a moderate expansion of the business of growing them will do no harm. In order to make the business pay, however, it will be necessary to have the most favorable situation and soil and then give the orchard the best of care. Willamette Valley peaches are not suitable for any markets but those close by, as they lack shipping quality. In flavor they are not surpassed when properly grown.

It isn't chasing for news when there is a plenty that makes the editor prematurely gray. It is chasing it when there isn't any. He has to have it one time just the same as the other—Forest Grove Times.

Facts About the Igorrotes.

Picturesquely located in the valley below Centennial Park, with Willamette Heights looming near by, is the Igorrote Village, easily the most interesting feature of the Lewis and Clark exposition, and the latest attraction to be added to Portland's fine fair. Delayed on the trip from their homes in the mountains of Northwestern Luzon by tropical rains, unfordable rivers and typhoons, these strange wild people reached Manila on August 1 and the exposition on September 4. Their village was ready for them in skeleton form, and since their arrival the houses have been thatched, and are now complete. It consists of numerous straw-covered huts, a pavilion in which ceremonial dances occur, a public building which serves as a court house, a jail and assembly place for all men's meetings, an "o-lag" or dormitory for girls and unmarried women and a "fa-wi" or dormitory for boys and unmarried men, and other structures necessary to give a correct representation of the home life of these people.

Among the more than one hundred tribes of the Philippine Islands the Igorrote is one of the most conspicuous, and easily the most interesting, because of his strange method of life and still stranger customs. So little known is he, that to-day he would be as great a curiosity in the city of Manila as in Portland. They are of Malay origin, of a superb bronze color, long straight hair, and remarkable physiques, although as a rule not tall. They are the only people in the Philippine Islands with a keen sense of humor. In all their movements they are singularly graceful. The men wear a breech-clout, called "G-string," and a picturesque little hat, which is not worn as a head covering but as a pocket. In their native condition the women wear only an apron of leaves, but here they wear a short skirt and queer jacket made of native woven cloth.

The Igorrote is a pagan, a barbarian in culture, an agriculturist from necessity, terracing the mountain side with stone, forming "sementeras" where they grow rice in the dry season, while others grow theirs in the wet season. This is accomplished by diverting streams so they will irrigate the sementeras. He is a head-hunter. There is constant warfare between neighboring tribes, and head-hunting is not only a means of self-defense, but in a measure a pastime, for after a member has taken and brought home a human head a month is given to happy celebration. There are rites and ceremonies peculiar to the event and there are constant dances and feasts, which bring to the otherwise hard-worked people relaxation and social intercourse.

All Igorrotes eat dog. It is a tribal dish. No female, however, is permitted to partake of dog flesh, because it is considered to have a quality which nerves up the fighter for the head-hunting expeditions, and the Igorrotes do not care to have their women fight. Before agreeing to come to Portland, the Igorrotes exacted a promise that their customs would not be interfered with, and they are permitted to have their favorite dish at the village. The dogs are carried to the Pa-ba-fu-nan or public building, the throat is cut, the dog bled, singed, dressed, cut-up, boiled and served in true Bontoc style.

The native industries of these people are shown in the village, and the women may be seen weaving their bright-colored cotton clothes, while the men are engaged in making rings, baskets and pocket-hats. Performances are given from ten in the morning to eleven at night, consisting of different dances, native songs, spear-throwing practice, sham battles, etc.

In the party are three chiefs, the first ever to leave the islands, each with a record as a head-hunter. Domingo, the first chief, according to official Spanish records, has taken seventeen human heads.

The Igorrotes are here in response to a request made by the president of the Lewis and Clark exposition to the government of the Philippine Islands.

At the St. Louis world's fair this village was visited by President Roosevelt, Vice-President Fairbanks and their families. It was endorsed by cabinet officers, senators, World's Fair officials, members of the Board of Lady Managers, press and pulpit as the most unique educational feature. The patrons are learning, too, that the Igorrote is industrious and not a mere eater of dogs.

The Igorrote Village has caught the popular fancy and is largely attended. It is an educational exhibit of high order, the only one at the Exposition portraying primitive man, and the little brown people are daily adding their quota to the "gayety of nations," as exemplified at the fair.
