

If ours was a big store in a big city our rent would be high and our expenses would be heavy.

If you came to us, under such conditions, we would have to charge you a higher price for things than we do now—and you would get nothing more for your money.

You may argue if we had the large store in the city, instead of the one we have, that we could offer better bargains on account of our larger buying and selling capacity, but such is not the case.

Gold, silver, and jewels are worth a certain market price. They are not sold for less than they are worth—they represent real money—and real money, as all know, is not to be found on a bargain counter.

We buy as economically as does any jeweler, consequently, with our smaller expenses, we are able to sell most things cheaper than do the majority of big city jewelers—and more than that, we can give you better personal attention.

In a word, we can give you "your money's worth" both in goods and in service.

C. B. Wilson

The Many Sided Printer.

The versatility of some printers is very aptly illustrated by the following advertisement which recently appeared in a prominent Western newspaper.

"Wanted—By a printer who is capable of taking full charge of a publishing and printing plant, a position as foreman. Can give valuable advice to persons who contemplate marriage, and has obtained a wide reputation as a trance medium. Would accept an appointment as a pastor of a small evangelical church or as substitute preacher. Has had experience as strike-breaker and would take work of this kind west of the Missouri river. Would have no objections to forming a small but select class of young ladies to teach them in the higher branches or to give them information as to the cause of the Trojan war. Can do odd jobs in a boarding house or would gladly accept a position as assayer of a mining company. To a dentist or a chiropodist his services would be valuable, and could fill with satisfaction a position as bass or tenor singer in a Methodist choir."

A Church Wooing.

It was at church I had met him. For two years we had seen each other every Sunday, and we had become very good friends, although the thought of a nearer relationship between us had never occurred to me.

He seemed fond of my company, but always appeared embarrassed and bashful when alone with me. One evening at church I noticed a look of decision in his eye. He took his seat beside me, and as the opening hymn was called out, he turned to an entirely different song and deliberately passed the book to me with his finger on the title. It read, "Take me as I am." Seeing he was of a charming personality and well supplied with worldly goods, I unhesitatingly returned the book to him open at the hymn, "Some sweet day by and by." With nervous excitement he turned to the song, "Let it be soon," at which I coquettishly showed him the words, "Wait, and murmur not." Thus we became engaged.

Alas, that tools are prosperous. Is it their penalty or their reward?

How many of us in listening to the tomtoms forget the violins?

To think an original thought is to take a step nearer the divine.
