The knocker is the fellow with a bad liver. Steady employment and less time spent in front of the corner grocery will usually effect a cure.

U'Ren was probably the most gratified man who looked in on the legislature Tuesday, when he saw the primary law vindicated by the election of Mulky and Bourne to the United States Senate.

The legislature carried out the will of the people, as expressed at the primary election last spring, by the election, last Tuesday, of Fred W. Mulky as United States Senator for the short term, and Jonathan Bourne, Jr., for the long term.

Our observation of men prompts the conclusion that newspaper comment as well as private speech, in opposition to the local option law, comes almost entirely from men who are at least fairly good patrons of saloons when opportunity offers.

The circumstances attending the departure of a comparatively new arrival in town, after a short business career here, reminds one of the story of the fellow which runs something like this—Owen Moore came to town owin' more than he could pay. Owen Moore went away, owin' more.

The members of the senate have a habit of getting into a pow wow occasionally when they will spend an hour or two in lampooning and calling each other names, very much the same as school boys do, and then they will take a round of making apologies and wind up by ordering the whole thing kept out of the Congressional Record. This is senatorial dignity with a vengeance.

John Hash, Benjamin Heater and Sebastian Brutscher are the only men left in the community who were numbered with the early settlers in what was formerly known as East Chehalem. To the young in years "Father Time" appears to move with exceeding slowness, but as the year's advance, his pace is hastened at a rate of surprising quickness as he gathers in the ripened sheaves.

Some people talk about the saloon business being legitimate and assert that the saloonkeeper is entitled to the same consideration under the law as any other business man. We might have some patience with such argument if the men who are engaged in the business had any consideration for law, but they have not. Governor Hanley, of Indiana, in a recent message to the legislature in which he urged more stringent temperance legislation said this: "But the liquor traffic brooks no restraint. It knows no law. It recognizes no right however fundamental and sacred. In Maine it tramples upon the provisions of the constitution and demands the substitution of legislative enactment. In Indiana it breaks over every legislative enactment, respecting neither hour, holiday nor Sabbath. It invades townships from which it has been excluded by the solemn act of the inhabitants of such townships, and by every trick and artifice and every secret corrupt method known to craft and greed seeks to impose itself upon an unwilling people. The business is so utterly indefensible from any standpoint, moral or economic, that I am prepared to give executive approval to any measure looking to the further regulation or restriction of the traffic which I believe to be a valid enactment."

FOR WEAL OR WOE.

When we note the severing of the marriage relation where the parties have lived together only a year or two, we naturally conclude that little time was taken for deliberation and poor judgment used in making a contract that must make for weal or woe during the natural lives of the contracting parties.

But what must we conclude when we witness the separation of man and wife, forty or more years after the marriage vow was taken and when a half dozen or more of their children have grown to manhood and womanhood, with numerous children playing about their own doors? Such were our thoughts, when, one day recently we stood an unwilling listener to an old man, as he stood leaning on a cane while he told his tale of woe.

They were married back in the sixties he said. "A pretty girl and smart as a whip." Then a recital was made of the family history, of children born and educated, of prosperity, of houses and lands, but in recent years "mother" had developed a bad temper, so he said, and things had gone on from bad to worse until a division of the property had been made and a separation effected.

We made several movements to get away before the story was finished, for it was distressing to listen to the tottering old man recite it, but he insisted that we should hear him through. A few days more at best and he will be laid away in the ground.

"For better or for worse"—this should be committed to memory and repeated many times over before the marriage contract is entered into. When once the contract is sealed the words "Bear and forbear" will do wonders for the making and maintaining of harmonious relations, if they are ever kept in mind and given heed to under all circumstances.

UP TO THE COUNCIL.

A new mayor with three new members of the city council were recently elected and the official machinery for the year will soon be organized for work. The tax levy has been made and we will have a certain amount of money to be used, as we hope, where it will do the most good. The amount will be small enough when it is divided up to meet the various needs of the town.

At the urgent request of the people a number of extra lights are being placed and this will entail an extra expense of thirty dollars per month. Plenty of street lights are a great convenience and we ought to have them if we can stand the expense.

It has been suggested that a saving might be made by making the marshal the night watchman. We are now paying $40 a month for a marshal and $50 a month for a night watchman. Of the latter's salary the city pays $15 and the other $35 is made up by the business men. This makes a pretty heavy drain along with all the other expenses and a plan for retrenchment is worthy of careful consideration.

A watchman at night is of more value to the town than a day man and if either must be dispensed with we would certainly favor letting the day man go. The marshal is supposed to have charge of the street work but a capable man, employed for two months in the spring and occasionally through the remainder of the season, would meet all the needs in this direction. Aside from the work on the streets the work for a marshal in Newberg is exceedingly light. The arrests made are few and far between and the majority of these cases could be attended to by the constable. In cases of emergency, should they arise, the night man could easily be called. Much more easily, in fact, than a day marshal can be reached when he is out of town, as is often the case.

It is up to the new council to arrange at the beginning of the year to cut the garment from the cloth in sight and the Graphic ventures to drop these suggestions before the election of a marshal and a watchman for the new year is taken up.

ELIMINATE THE UNFIT.

Much has been written in the past two or three years in opposition to the "professional" in college athletics and the tendency to pass him around among the institutions that are able to put up the money to get him. Since this fellow has been pretty well removed from the public eye for the present at least, we would suggest that the professional Y. M. C. A. acrobat, who does stunts for the public gaze in the name of a religious organization, needs a little attention.

There is an element in Y. M. C. A. work that has been insisting that the word "Christian" should be eliminated from the name of the association. Whether or not this comes from a class of men who simply want an association of "good fellows" who can meet in the association rooms much as the ordinary club meets, without restraint or any thought of religious training for young men we are not informed. Possibly it may come from those who have noted the tendency to cold form and actual professionalism in the work, and believing the word "Christian" is a misnomer, think it should be eliminated for consistency's sake.

Be that as it may, the fact remains that here in Oregon at least, the good name of this most worthy association has, for the past few years, been time and again brought into disrepute by the organization and sending out of teams of athletic "sports" made up of fellows who can't play a game of ball through without the use of the vilest oaths, and who conduct themselves in a manner that places them on a level with the back alley element.

If it is a discredit to a college to put up money to secure the services of a professional athlete of no standing in his studies, in order to strengthen the college football team, what must be said of the Y. M. C. A. that sends out a ball team made up of cigarette fiends and those given to the use of profane and obscene language?

It occurs to us, that if the former good name of the Y. M. C. A. is to be maintained, it is high time heroic measures were being taken to raise the standard by eliminating the unfit from the gymnasium.
