JUDGE ARTMAN SPEAKS HERE.

Famous Indiana Jurist Eloquent-ly Defends His Verdict that Saloon is an Outlaw.

The most notable session of the week of Oregon Yearly Meeting was that given to temperance when Judge Artman, of Indiana, delivered his famous address Saturday afternoon on the unconstitutionality of the saloon. His presence on this occasion was a tribute to Friends and a recognition of the advance ground they have always taken in this as in other reforms.

The church was thronged with people and it is safe to say that in his tour across the continent Judge Artman will address few more interested and attentive audiences. For a full hour and a half he spoke, supporting his proposition with such a chain of logic and reasoning as to make it unassailable. He made his case so plain that his hearers afterward asked each other why this view had not been pressed long ago. Judge Artman said in part:

"The judge more than any other person must know the moral law, and if any action ever requires its application and he does not apply it, either he is dishonest or a moral coward. The moral law, like the common law, is based upon the truth that no man belongs wholly to himself. He holds his body and his possessions in line with the fundamental principle that he must not use them as to infringe upon the rights of his fellow man.

"There was a time in the history of this world when there was no state, no constitution and no common law, but there has never been a time when the moral law has not been in force. Right and wrong are not the creation of any constitution, nor of any common law nor legislative enactment. Right is action in harmony with moral law and wrong is violation of it. If God had put angels on this earth instead of men we never would have needed other restraint than moral law, but as he put men here with all their passions and downward tendencies, there must necessarily be some means of enforcing the moral law. Thus, as an absolute necessity, the state came into existence as a means of self-defense. That is the connection between the constitution, the common law and the moral law.

TERMS ARE CONTRADICTION.

"We hear a great deal about a thing being morally wrong and legally right. How can this be possible if the basis is the same for both? A thing morally right is also legally right if the law is properly enforced. The people have no choice between moral right and moral wrong, for Almighty God has made that choice for them.

"Under the moral law the saloon business is an outlaw, and it must be closed because it also runs contrary to the common law and the Constitution. Intoxicating drink is a poison which frenzies the brain and directs the murderer in the thrust of the fatal knife. It does not promote the general welfare nor the best interests of society and is not an inherent right of citizenship.

"The Supreme Court of the State of Indiana has three times said that no man keeps a saloon by right, and the Supreme Court of the United States has said three times that no citizen has an inherent right to manufacture intoxicating liquor as a beverage. The Indiana court has also said, however that the license is a prohibition of the traffic. In my country we had a man who for forty-five years conducted a saloon under a license. There came a time when he did not get a license, but according to the decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana we had prohibition for forty-five years and were then doing away with it.

"If the saloon is detrimental to society, if it endangers the public morals, if it endangers the peace of society and inflicts immoral and pernicious results—if it does any of these things it is unlawful for there is no such thing as a common right to do wrong. That the saloon does all of these things is conceded.

SALOON STANDS CONDEMNED.

"A saloonman said to me, 'You have no more right, by doing away with the saloon, to rob me of the right to earn my bread than I have to burn your house, and if you do it a dose of lead will be the proper thing for you.'

"If you paid your money to become a member of a banking corporation, having signed the constitution to that effect you would think a judge crazy who would say in court that you had no just cause for action should the board of trustees of the bank go into the saloon business because it is more profitable. Our nation is a large corporation. The purpose for which the Government was organized condemns the saloon. The leading paper of Indiana said that this business is a running sore upon the body politic, and I think the best thing we can do is to embalm, cremate and bury this damnable business.

"The price paid by the boys in blue and the boys in gray for a free country was not too great, for Old Glory, the dearest emblem of liberty that ever kissed God's sunlight, still waves over our fair and undivided land. But that emblem cannot stand for the protection of the saloon and the home at the same time. It must stand for the destruction of the one or the other. This is not a battle, but like the conflict over slavery, a war.

"Compared with the old saloon dragon, slavery was as innocent as a babe. Newspapers may contend and courts declare that legislative action is the law but they will not settle the question. This government can no more exist half drunk and half sober than it could half slave and half free. The time is coming when we must all join the Fire Department. We should march in solid ranks to our Appomattox."

At the close of the address, Mayor Jesse Edwards, who presided and who also represents the Yearly Meeting in the State Anti-Saloon League, made a call for a collection to help pay the expenses of carrying the case to the Indiana supreme court. The sum of fifty-six dollars was the result.

Bill Nye's Cow.

"Bill Nye, the humorist, once had a cow to sell, the story goes, and advertised her as follows: 'Owing to my ill health, I will sell at my residence in township 19, range 18, according to the government survey, one plush raspberry cow, age eight years. She is of undoubted courage and gives milk frequently. To a man who does not fear death in any form she would be a great boon. She is very much attached to her present home with a stay chain, but she will be sold to any one who will agree to treat her right. She is one-fourth Shorthorn and three-fourths hyena. I will also throw in a double barrel shot gun, which goes with her. In May she usually goes away for a week or two, and returns with a tall red calf with wabbling legs. Her name is Rose. I would rather sell her to a non-resident.'

In the Good Old Summer Time.

Editor Soule, of the Lincoln Leader, gets off the following: "Last week we said that we saw a man hugging a girl on the Newport beach and that the girl would discount the Portland Journal prize beauty 100 per cent. There is no doubt but that the three young ladies who wrote thanking us for the compliment are the identical one we saw."

Some people are so dishonest they cannot trust themselves to make change.

The Charming Woman

Is not necessarily one of perfect form and features. Many a plain woman who could never serve as an artist's model, possesses those rare qualities that all the world admires; neatness, clear eyes, clean smooth skin and that sprightliness of step and action that accompany good health. A physically weak woman is never attractive, not even to herself. Electric Bitters restore weak women, give strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, beautiful complexion. Guaranteed at F. H. Caldwell & Co's., druggist, 50c.

The man behind the gun doesn't amount to so much as the man behind the dollar.
